Whether, however, this was so or not, the whole condition of affairs was changed in 1881, which was long before either the will or the transfer with respect to which the present question arises. In that year the Probate and Administration Act was passed, and since that time grants of probate and administration are as necessary for the administration and distribution of the estate of Hindus and Mahomedans as they are for those of Europeans, and as since then they are in precisely the same position, I think that the Courts must have the same powers of granting letters of administration to the Administrator-General to the estates of Hindus and Mahomedans, under s. 15 of the Act of 1874, as it has to make the same grants with reference to other estates; and that since then at all events it is impossible to say that a right can be transferred to the Administrator-General under s. 31 which could not be granted to him by the Courts under the earlier sections of the Act. Section 16 is no doubt limited to estates which are within the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, but that section deals with very particular cases, and I do not think the fact that the duties of the Administrator-General under it are limited to those cases can be sufficient to limit the powers of the Courts under the other sections which are general in their terms. It is true that s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act provides that nothing in that Act contained shall "affect" the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General, and it is argued that "affect" in that clause means change, and that if the effect of s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act, when incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act, was to enable the Administrator-General to accept a transfer of a Hindu estate under s. 30, it would change his rights and duties, and its operation on him would be prevented by s. 5 of the Act of 1870; but assuming that this is the correct reading of the section, the present Administrator-General was not appointed under the Act which was then in force, and is not exercising any powers under it, but derives all his rights, duties and privileges from the Act of 1874, and I do not think that the rights, duties and [757] privileges of an office created by the Act of 1874 can be affected by a clause in the Act of 1870, which saved the rights, duties and privileges of an office which was created in 1867 and was abolished in 1874.

It is said in the case of Leverson v. The Queen (1) that acts which have been done under a Statute may be taken into consideration in construing it, and in the present case what has taken place since the Hindu Wills Act was passed would seem to indicate that it was understood to be the intention of the Legislature in passing that Act to bring Hindu estates within the operation of s. 30 of the Act of 1867; but that some doubt having arisen as to the effect of the saving clause in the Hindu Wills Act, it was decided to repeal the Act of 1867 and to re-enact it in 1874 to avoid any such difficulty. It appears from the records of the office that the first time on which the estate of a Hindu was transferred by his executor to the Administrator-General was on the 6th of November 1871. Afterwards transfers were made of Hindu estates on December 5th 1874, July 15th 1878, March 4th 1879, July 21st 1884, November 25th 1886, and September 20th 1888. In 1881 the Probate and Administration Act of 1881 was passed, which applies to the estates of all persons to whom the Indian Succession Act does not apply. By it so much of the Hindu Wills Act as incorporates s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act is repealed, but s. 4 of the new Act is identical in its terms with s. 179 of the Succession Act, so that, since the passing of that Act, the position of the executor or administrator of a Mahomedan or Hindu has been the same as that of the executor or administrator of a European, and we find that on the 25th of January 1888 the administrator of a Mahomedan transferred the estate to the Administrator-General under s. 31 of the Act of 1874.

The number of the estates which have been transferred by Hindu or Mahomedan executors and administrators since 1870 is no doubt small, but some of them are large, and I have no doubt that there has never been a time in recent years in which a substantial part of the business of the office has not been connected with such estate; indeed, there has been a good deal of litigation in this Court arising out of them, to which the Administrator-[758] General has been a party, so that the practice has for years been notorious.

In what I have said so far I have assumed that s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act was sufficient to prevent the Administrator-General from accepting a transfer of the estate of a Hindu under s. 30 of the Act of 1867, and I have done so because I think it makes no difference to the result of this case, whether it was so or not, and because I think the course of business in the office, which I have before noticed, indicates that this view was taken by the Legislature, but in my opinion that is not by any means the case. The marginal note to s. 5 is "saving the rights of the Administrator-General, Bengal," to s. 149 of the Probate and Administration Act it is "saving clause," and although the marginal notes are not any part of the Act they do, I think, indicate that the object of both sections was to save the existing rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General and not to prevent him from acquiring any new ones if any such were conferred upon him by the Act; but, however that may be, I am of opinion that no new rights, duties or privileges were in fact conferred upon him either by the Act of 1870 or by that of 1881, or that his position was changed or affected by either of them. The right and privilege of the Administrator-General under s. 30 of the Act of 1867 and under s. 31 of the Act of 1874 was to take over the estate of the deceased from any executor or administrator who had the power to transfer it to him. His duty was to administer the estate according to law, and those rights, duties and privileges are the same to-day as they were in 1867, when the Act of that year came into force. The persons whose positions have been affected by the Hindu Wills Act and the Probate and Administration Act are the executors and administrators of Hindus, Mahomedans, and all the other inhabitants of India who are not within the provisions of the Indian Succession Act. By the Hindu Wills Act the executor of a Hindu was placed in precisely the same position as the executor of a European who had died in India, and by the Probate and Administration Act the same change was made in the position of all executors and administrators in India who were not within the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, and when that was done I think that first [759] the Hindu executor in 1870, and afterwards all other executors and administrators in 1881, were brought within the operation of the transfer sections of the Administrator-General's Acts, by virtue of the principle which has been constantly acted upon, and which was stated by Lord

MARCH 16. Holt in the case of Lane v. Cotton (1) to be, that "when an Act of Parliament creates a new interest it shall be governed by the same law that like interests have been governed before." This principle has been acted upon and illustrated in a number of cases, which will be found collected in Wilberforce on Statutes, pp. 166, 167, and in the case of Queen v. Smith (2) is again stated in somewhat different terms by Bovill, C.J. He says that when the earlier Statute deals with a genus within which a new species is created by a subsequent Act, the earlier Act will include the new species. 21 C. 732. In my opinion the present case is within the strictest reading of this principle. By the Act of 1870 a new interest is created in the executor of the will of a Hindu, and I think that to use the words of Lord Holt "such new interest shall be governed by the same law that like interests were governed before;" or, to apply the words of Bovill, C.J., the executors of Hindus are converted into a new species of executors by the Act of 1870 within the genus of executors upon which the older Acts, i.e., the Administrator-General's Act of 1867, operated.

For these reasons, I think that this order cannot be maintained, and I would decree the appeal and dismiss the application with costs in both Courts.

I have thought it better to rest my judgment on the later legislation, because I think that the course of business since 1870 indicates that in the opinion of the Legislature a change in the powers of the executors of Hindus under these sections took place at that time, but in doing so, I am anxious not to be understood as expressing any opinion that the executor or administrator of a Hindu or Mahomedan had not in 1867 any interest in the estate of the deceased which he could have transferred to the Administrator-General under s. 30 of that Act.

PRINSEP, J.—Some two and half years after probate had been obtained by the executors of the will of Nundo Lall Mullick, a Hindu, who died in 1891, they executed a deed purporting, under [760] s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1874, to transfer to the Administrator-General all estates, effects and interests vested in them as executors.

The only point raised in this appeal is whether this is a valid transfer, that is, whether under s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1874 the executor of the will of a deceased Hindu is competent to transfer by deed all estates, effects and interests vested in him by virtue of a probate or letters of administration obtained by him. The matter is complicated only by the course of legislation which has left in doubt and obscurity what might have been clearly expressed. It is true that this point has been raised now for the first time and only after some years, but the learned counsel who appears for the Administrator-General has been able to show us only a few instances in which such transfers have been made. We have not therefore a long and unvarying practice to assist us in deciding what is and has been accepted to be the intention of the Legislature. After a consideration of the legislation since the creation of the office of Administrator-General by the Administrator-General's Act VII of 1849, Mr. Justice Sale has held that no such power of transfer, as in this case, has been conferred on the executors of a will of a deceased Hindu.

I do not think it necessary to discuss what were the powers of Sir Thomas Turton who filled the office of Ecclesiastical Registrar under the late Supreme Court up to 1847. It is sufficient in my opinion that we should consider the state of the law since the creation of the office of

(1) 12 Mod. 486.

Administrator-General in 1849, for that was a new office with certain specified duties attached to it, and it does not therefore necessarily follow that all the powers exercised by Sir T. Turton by virtue of that and other offices were conferred on the Administrator-General. Nor is it necessary to consider how far the powers so exercised were with or without the authority of law. Before the Act of 1849 creating the office of Administrator-General the only Indian legislation in respect of probates and letters of administration in regard to the estates of deceased Hindus in which any assets were within the local jurisdiction of the late Supreme Court, is to be found in Acts XIX and [761] XX of 1841. Section 20 of Act XIX of 1841 alone applied to the late Supreme Court, and it enabled that Court to direct the Ecclesiastical Registrar or one or more curators to collect and take charge of the effects of any deceased person who may have left moveable or immoveable property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of that Court, if it was "satisfied that danger is to be apprehended of the misappropriation and waste of the property before it can be ascertained who may be legally entitled to the succession to such property."

Section 14 of Act XX of 1841 expressly limited the effect of such probate and letters of administration to the recovery of debts only so as to provide security to debtors paying the same. That Act was expressly repealed only in 1860. So any powers exercised by the Administrator-General under probate and letters of administration granted by the late Supreme Court in respect of the estates of deceased Hindus would be limited in the manner just stated.

Act VIII of 1855 took the place of Act VII of 1849, repealing it. That Act provided specially for the estates of deceased Hindus. Section 9 directed that all letters of administration or letters ad colligenda bona which shall hereafter be granted by the Supreme Court of Judicature at any of the said Presidencies (that is, of Bengal, Madras or Bombay), shall be granted to the Administrator-General of the Presidency, unless they shall be granted to the next-of-kin of the deceased. Section 11 required the Administrator-General to obtain letters of administration, either generally or with the will annexed, to the effects of any person, not being a Mahomedan or Hindu who may have left assets exceeding Rs. 500 if probate shall not have been applied for within one month of his decease. (I have thought it unnecessary to set out this section in detail and accurately, as it is sufficient to show that in dealing with the estates of British subjects and others over which the Supreme Court had jurisdiction the estates of Hindus were expressly excepted.)

Section 12 empowered the Administrator-General, on the application of a person interested in the assets of the estate of a deceased person, whether a Mahomedan or Hindu or not, showing that danger [762] is to be apprehended of the misappropriation of such assets, unless letters of administration of the effects of such person are granted, to obtain from the late Supreme Court an order directing him to apply for such letters of administration. This was, it may be observed, a re-enactment of Act XIX of 1841, s. 20. It may also be usefully here mentioned that the proviso to s. 17 made a special exception in respect of the estates of a deceased Mahomedan or Hindu, if, on an application for the grant of letters of administration applied for under s. 12 by the Administrator-General, the Court was satisfied that such grant was unnecessary for the protection of the assets.

Section 14 empowered the late Supreme Court to direct the Administrator-General to take charge of moveable or immoveable property within the local limits of its jurisdiction belonging to the estate of any deceased person, whether a Mahomedan, or Hindu or not, if it was satisfied that danger is to be apprehended of the misappropriation and waste of such property before it can be ascertained who may be legally entitled to the succession to such property, or whether the Administrator-General is entitled to letters of administration to such deceased person.

Section 43 is the next section which demands attention in connection with this case. That section specially exempts estates of deceased persons, Mahomedans or Hindus, from its operation; it enabled the Administrator-General to grant a certificate to collect debts due to estates of all other persons, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the late Supreme Court, when the effects do not exceed on the whole Rs. 500.

The Indian Succession Act (X of 1865) is the next legislative enactment relating to this subject, but that expressly does not apply to certain persons, and amongst other Hindus, so that it did not affect the previously existing law in respect to the administration of the estates of deceased Hindus.

In 1867 the Act of 1855 was repealed, and in many respects re-enacted, by Act XXIV of that year. Section 16 of the Act of 1867 re-enacted s. 11 of that of 1855, except that the limit of the value of the assets to be administered was altered. Section 17 re-enacted s. 12 of the Act of 1855, and the [763] proviso to that section repealed the proviso to s. 17. Sections 18 and 33 re-enacted ss. 14 and 43 of the Act of 1855. I have therefore thought it unnecessary to refer to these parts of the Act of 1867 at length.

But the Act of 1867 for the first time by s. 30 empowered a private executor or administrator, with the previous consent of the Administrator-General, to transfer to that officer by an instrument in writing all estates, effects and interests vested in him by such probate or letters, and the Administrator-General was given the rights and made subject to the liabilities which he would have had, and to which he would have been subject, if the probate or letters of administration had been given to him.

In 1870 the Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870) was passed. This was what has been termed a skeleton Act. It extended and applied certain sections of the Indian Succession Act of 1865 to the wills of Hindus, and amongst these were ss. 179, 187 and 191, which are important in connection with this case. Section 179 declared that the executor or administrator, as the case may be, of a deceased person, is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. Section 187 provided that no right as executor or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless probate of the will or letters of administration, with copy of the will annexed, shall have been granted. Section 191 declared that letters of administration entitles the administrator to all rights belonging to the intestate as effectually as if the administration had been granted at the moment after his death.

Section 5 of the Hindu Wills Act, however, provided that nothing contained in that Act shall affect the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General of Bengal, Madras and Bombay, respectively. From this I understand that in respect of all matters connected with the wills of deceased Hindus and others to whom the Hindu Wills Act applied, the position of the Administrator-General remained as before.

It will be necessary to refer presently to a portion of s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act, but I will pass on to state the course of legislation. In 1874 there was fresh legislation in respect [764] of the office of Administrator-General. Act II of 1874 is entitled an Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the office and duties of Administrator-General. I find that since the passing of the previous Act of 1867 some Acts had been passed making several amendments in matters of no general importance. The consolidation was the incorporation of these Acts in one Act with the existing Act of 1867 which dealt generally with the subject. The amendment of the law so far as was expressly made was on matters which do not touch the case now before us. The sections of the Act of 1867 to which I have referred were re-enacted verbatim in the new Act so as to attain the object of consolidation, and amongst these s. 30 of the Act of 1867 was re-enacted as s. 31 of the Act of 1874.

It has been contended however that, having regard to the application of ss. 179, 187 and 191 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865 by a new law relating to the office of Administrator-General, it was the intention of the Legislature to alter the previously existing law as expressed in s. 30 of the Act of 1867, and to make it what it would have been if that Act had been applicable to Hindus, or if the Hindu Wills Act of 1870 had been passed simultaneously with the Act of 1867. To determine this it is desirable that we should consider the intention of the Legislature so far as we can properly gather it from the course of legislation and the proceedings of the Legislative Council. I do not think that this is absolutely necessary for the purposes of this case, for the law, though obscurely expressed, can be ascertained. But I think that we are at liberty to do so, and that such a course of enquiry is open to us, and is in this instance satisfactory in its result, because in my opinion it confirms what in my understanding of the law is its proper interpretation as having been intentionally so declared.

It is contended that as s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865, which was made applicable to the executors or administrators under the wills of deceased Hindus, declared that they shall be the legal representatives of such persons for all purposes, and that all the property of such persons shall be vested in them as such executors or administrators, the entire estate, not as a manager as held by the Courts, but absolutely, an executor or [765] administrator was competent under s. 31 of Act II of 1874 to transfer all estates, effects and interests vested in him by virtue of such probate or letters to the Administrator-General.

There can be no doubt that when the Act of 1867 was passed the powers of an executor of the estate of a deceased Hindu was only that of a manager. The cases cited—Sharo Bibi v. Baldeo Das (1), and Jaykali Debi v. Shibnath Chatterjee (2)—are sufficient authorities for this, and the law was so understood or accepted. This had its origin from the principle under which the power of a Hindu to make a will originated. It was regarded only as a gift which inter vivos was legal under Hindu law, but was intended to have effect after the death of the donor testator. I find that this has been adopted by the Legislature, for s. 3 of the Hindu Wills Act provides that nothing in the Act "shall authorise a testator to bequeath property which he could not have alienated inter vivos, or to deprive any persons of any right of maintenance of which but for s. 2 of this Act he could not deprive them by will." And it cannot, I think, be disputed Moreover, by reason of s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act, 1870 the position of the Administrator-General in respect of such executors remained unaltered. The application of s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865 to Hindu Wills, with the limitation enacted by s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act, did not alter the law. The question then arises, was there any alteration in the law in consequence of the passing of Act II of 1874?—the Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to the office and duties of Administrator-General.

APPEAL
CIVIL.

I do not, first of all, regard this Act as creating a new office with new duties. It was a more convenient mode of expressing the old law with some amendments, and I find no indication in it of any intention to modify the previously existing law and practice in regard to the manner of dealing with the estates of Hindu testators after probate and letters of administration have been [766] obtained. With the practice adopted by our Indian Legislature, it is extremely difficult, if not impossible, to apply all the rules laid down by the Courts in England for ascertaining the intention which has caused the passing of any particular law. The course of legislation in this country affords a tolerably sure guide, because such measures are the acts of a Government having some claim to a continuous policy, and whenever any departure from that policy in any matter of importance to the general community or even to a large body, such as Hindus, has been arrived at, it is almost always clearly and emphatically indicated.

Accordingly the introduction of any Bill into the Legislative Council is always accompanied by a statement of the Objects and Reasons for the proposed measure. On these grounds, I believe, the Judges of our Court have taken this statement of Objects and Reasons into consideration as having some indication of the motives which have caused legislation on any particular subject and the object which it is desired to attain. I would refer only to the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court—Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (1).

An original Bill is, as experience has shown, considerably altered in its character and scope while passing through the Legislative Council, and chiefly after its committal to a Select Committee for report, after consideration of the opinions expressed by various persons, official and non-official, on the measure before the Council. As an easy and certain way of learning the amendments contemplated and proposed by the Select Committee it is not unusual, and I think not improper, to refer to the Report so made. The Report contains mention not only of the proposed amendments of the law but generally reasons for recommending them. By this means we can learn the reasons for which legislation has been thought necessary, and the objects in view, that is, the particular points on which it is desired to amend the existing law or for passing any new law. With this explanation I think that there is nothing in consistent in our practice with the rules laid down by the Courts in England. I should also state that the statement of Objects and Reasons for the introduction of any Bill into the Legislative Council, as well as the Report of any [767] Select Committee to whom the Bill may be committed for report, are invariably published under authority of Government in the Government Gazette for public information.

As the intention of the Legislature in passing Act II of 1874 has been made the subject of argument before us, I think that, so far as it bears on the point for our decision in this appeal, it may be gathered from a consideration of the statement of Objects and Reasons and the Report of the Select Committee.

Now, in respect of the Act of 1874, we find no indication, either in the statement of Objects and Reasons or in the Report of the Select Committee as published in the Government Gazette, of any intention to modify the law as previously expressed in s. 30 of the Act of 1867 and the Hindu Wills Act of 1870. The modification which it was intended to make and the objects to be attained are all explicitly set out. The original intention, as stated in the Objects and Reasons, was to amend the law on some points which do not touch this case. The Report of the Select Committee shows that other matters, also irrelevant to this case, were presented to them, and were accepted as desirable amendments. These are set out in the Report made by the Committee to the Legislative Council. The Report further shows that the Committee also considered that the law as thus amended and contained in the Act of 1867, and some small Acts amending that Act, should conveniently be consolidated. The passing of the Act of 1874 shows that this recommendation was accepted. There was no expressed intention to modify the previous law by extending the powers of the executor of a will of a deceased Hindu, or the powers of an Administrator-General to accept the duties and responsibilities of such an executor under deed executed to him. The position of such an executor as laid down by our Courts was no doubt known to the Legislature, and there is no indication of any deliberate intention to alter that position or to confer on him the powers to relieve himself from all the responsibilities of that office. No such intention can safely be inferred. We have further the fact that not only was s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act of 1870, which declares that nothing in that Act shall affect the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General, allowed to remain unrepealed, but a similar provision was made by [768] s. 66 of the Act of 1874 to the effect that nothing in the Indian Succession Act, 1865, shall be taken to supersede or affect the rights, duties or privileges of the Administrator-General. Although by making s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act applicable to the wills of Hindus, the Hindu Wills Act of 1870 declared that the executor or administrator of a deceased (Hindu) person is his legal representative for all purposes, and that all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such, it further enacted that nothing in that Act shall affect the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General. The argument from the application of s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act of 1865 to Hindu wills, that as the entire estate became vested in an executor or administrator, such person was competent under s. 31 of Act II of 1874 to transfer to the Administrator-General by an instrument in writing all estate, effects and interests so vested in him, seems to me to be completely met by s. 66 of that Act, which declares that nothing contained in the Indian Succession Act of 1865 (and therefore nothing in s. 167 of that Act) shall be taken to supersede or affect the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General. If therefore before the enactment of Act II of 1874 the executor or administrator under a Hindu will had not the power of transfer, and in my opinion he had not, the terms of s. 66 of that Act show that it was not intended to give him that power by reason only of anything contained in s. 179 or any other section of the Indian Succession Act of 1865. I am further of opinion that the passing of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881) has not altered the law in this respect. It is applicable to Hindus, but it must be read subject to the Hindu Wills Act, 1870, which by s. 154 it has amended by repealing portions of it which made certain section of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, applicable to Hindu Wills, the reason for such amendments being that these sections appeared in the new Act. Still that Act must be read with s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act, and there is, I think, no valid reason for holding that it was intended by that Act to alter the law as expressed first in s. 30 of Act XXIV of 1867 and as now expressed in s. 31 of Act II of 1874, read with s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act, and as [769] further explained by s. 66 of the Act of 1874. There is also much force in the argument of the learned Advocate-General who draws attention to the fact that in the case of the will of a Hindu, save under exceptional circumstances, such as waste, the Administrator-General cannot take out letters of administration, although if appointed executor by the will, he can obtain probate, and that therefore it is not likely that the Legislature should have intended that he should by the act of an executor do what he could not ordinarily do. It is remarkable that in ss. 17 and 18 of Act XXIV of 1867, and in the corresponding ss. 17 and 18 of Act II of 1874, it should be specially provided that these sections are applicable to the general community, whether the person whose assets are dealt with is a Hindu, Mahomedan, Buddhist or not, and that s. 16 of the Act of 1867 and the corresponding s. 15 of Act II of 1874 especially exempt persons of that description, while both s. 30 of the former Act and the corresponding s. 31 of the Act of 1874 do not either expressly include or exempt such persons.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the construction of the law expressed by Mr. Justice Sale, is correct, and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

TREVELYAN, J.—Nundo Lall Mullick died on the 22nd of February 1891, leaving property in Calcutta. He left a will dated the 6th of August 1889. The executors of this will took out probate on the 17th of March 1891, and on the 14th of August 1893 executed a deed by which they purported, under s. 31 of Act II of 1874 (the Administrator-General's Act), to transfer all estates, effects and interests vested in them by virtue of the probate to the Administrator-General of Bengal.

The only question before us is whether this transfer is a valid one, or, in other words, whether the executor of a Hindu testator has power to transfer the property of the testator to the Administrator-General under the terms of s. 31 of Act II of 1874. This question has been argued before us with great care and ability, and it is to my mind a question of very great importance.

Counsel for the Administrator-General has informed us that in eight cases the estates of Hindus and Mahomedans (have been transferred [770] to the Administrator-General, such transfers purporting to be made either under s. 31 of Act II of 1874 or under the corresponding section of the former Administrator-General's Act, viz., Act XXIV of 1867. Of these cases, one was the transfer of the estate of an intestate Mahomedan, to whose case the considerations referred to in this judgment would have no application. Of the seven Hindu cases one was a transfer of letters of administration; of the other six cases four were the transfers of the probates of wills made before the Hindu Wills Act; the remaining two were transfers of probates which had been granted on the 21st January 1882, and 11th December 1884 respectively. If in a large number of cases the estates of Hindus and Mahomedans had, since a power of transfer was given by the Act of 1867, been transferred to the Administrator-General, it might have been said that this practice threw light on the construction of the Act; but it is clear that there cannot be said to have been anything like a practice. Eight cases only in nearly 27 years would not amount to anything approaching a practice, and, if anything, the small number of transfers would rather show that the view which the Administrator-General now contends for has by no means been generally accepted. We have no information at all as to what portion of the business of the office of Administrator-General has been connected with these estates. We have been referred to three suits in connection with these estates. In two of them the Administrator-General was a party, but no question of the kind which we have now to decide was raised. I think it clear that we must come to the determination of this question without considering these transfers in any way.

The words that we have to construe are as follows: "Any private executor or administrator may, with the previous consent of the Administrator-General of the Presidency in which the property comprised in the probate or letters of administration is situate, by an instrument in writing under his hand, notified in the local Gazette, transfer all estates, effects and interests vested in him by virtue of such probate or letters to the Administrator-General by his name of office."

One of the means by which a Court is entitled to seek assistance in construing the Acts of the Legislature is by referring to [771] the previous history of the law and legislation on the subject. As Sir George Jessell, M.R., puts it in Holme v. Guy (1): "Although the Court is not at liberty to construe an Act of Parliament by the motives which influenced the Legislature, yet when the history of law and legislation tells the Court, and prior judgments tell this present Court, what the object of the Legislature was, the Court is to see whether the terms of the section are such as to carry out that object and no other, and to read the section with a view to finding out what it means and not with a view to extending it to something that was not intended."

In construing the Acts which we have to deal with here, we must also remember that the Legislature is to be assumed to be aware of, and to have in contemplation, the existing law upon the subject. Therefore it is in this case necessary to see what the law was at the time when the Act of 1874 was passed, that being the Act under which the transfer now in question was made.

In my opinion, the question which we have to determine can be conveniently sub-divided as follows: (1) What was the position of the executor of a Hindu prior to the passing of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867? (2) Did s. 30 of that Act apply to the executors of Hindus? (3) Did the Hindu Wills Act alter the construction of s. 30 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867 and make that section applicable to Hindus? (4) Has s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1874 altered the law which existed at the time it was passed.

I may here point out that so far as it has any bearing on the present

MARCH 16. s. 31 of the Act of 1874.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL. 21 C. 732. I think there can be no doubt as to what was the position of the executor of a Hindu at the time that the Act of 1867 was passed. He was, unless greater powers had been given him by the will, merely a manager having no greater powers under the Hindu law than the kurtah of a joint family or the guardian of a minor's property. The grant of probate by the Court vested nothing in him. The law on this subject is stated by Sir Henry Maine in his statement of Objects and Reasons for the Bill, [772] which afterwards became the Hindu Wills Act, as follows: "Then the native executor takes nothing from any grant of the Court. His title is founded solely on the will considered as an instrument of gift."

In Sharo Bibi v. Buldeo Das (1), Norman, J., at p. 26 of the report, says: "As regards a person appointed as executor of the will of a Hindu his position is different. He takes nothing from any grant of the Court. His title is founded solely and simply on the will of the testator, considered as an instrument of gift." In the case of Jaykali Debi v. Shib Nath Chatterjee (2), Phear, J., says at p. 4 of the report: "I suppose it is now clear that probate does not confer upon the executor of a Hindu will any personal rights of property analogous in any way to an English estate or interest. The will gives him just such powers of dealing with the property comprehended in it as its words express, and no more. Beyond the scope of the will, and so far as he is not constructively restricted by its directions, it may be that he has the powers which are implied in the bare authority of a manager during minority, but these are all he can claim. At any rate this doctrine seems to have been laid down with regard to immoveable property in the case of Sreemutty Dossee v. Tara Churn Coondoo Chowdhry (3), by which I readily admit myself bound to be guided." The case of Sreemutty Dossee v. Tara Churn Coondoo Chowdhry was decided before the Administrator-General's Act of 1867 was passed. In the well known case of Kherodemoney Dossee v. Doorgamoney Dossee (4), Markby, J. (at page 468 of the report), says: "With regard to the first contention, there is no doubt that 'vest' is not an appropriate word to describe the position of a Hindu executor in a will made prior to the Wills Act. It has been frequently held that the mere appointment of a person as executor to a Hindu does not cause any property to vest in him at all, and that if, as executor, he is entitled to hold the property, he holds only as manager."

Probate vested nothing. The practice of granting probate grew up as a convenient form of establishing the factum of the will in Court. These decisions, which all referred to wills made [773] before the Hindu Wills Act came into force, show unmistakeably what has been considered to be the law applicable to the wills of Hindus before the passing of the Hindu Wills Act. The Legislature in giving the probates granted to representatives of Hindus before Act XX of 1841 came into force, the effect of certificates for the purpose of recovery of debts, recognized the limited character of probates which had been granted by the Supreme Court. Section 14 of that Act is as follows: "And it is hereby declared and enacted that all probates and letters of administration granted by any of Her Majesty's Courts in cases in which any assets belonging to the deceased persons were at the time of their deaths within the local jurisdiction of the Court granting the probate or letters of administration, shall have the effect of probate and letters of administration granted in respect of the property of British subjects, but for the purpose of the recovery of debts only, and the security of debtors paying the same, except so far as is in the Act provided." In this section "British subjects" is admittedly used in the limited sense of what we now call "European British subjects."

Having regard to these decisions, I think we must hold that until the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, probate vested nothing in the executor of a Hindu, and that accordingly, the phraseology of s. 30 of the Act 1867 was wholly inappropriate in the case of the executor of a Hindu. It follows, I think, that we must hold that in enacting s. 30, the Legislature did not intend to apply it to probates of Hindu wills. In all probability the phraseology of s. 30, which was then an entirely new enactment, was chosen with regard to the provisions of the Indian Succession Act, which had been passed two years before and which did not apply to either Hindus or Mahomedans.

The next question is whether the provision of the Hindu Wills Act had the effect of applying s. 30 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867 to Hindus. By the Hindu Wills Act, s. 2, embodying s. 179 of the Indian Succession Act, the executor of the deceased person is his legal representative for all purposes, and all the property of the deceased person vests in him as such. The second section also embodied the 187th section of the Indian Succession Act, which was as follows: "No right as executor [774] or legatee can be established in any Court of Justice, unless a Court of competent jurisdiction within the province shall have granted probate of the will under which the right is claimed, or shall have granted letters of administration under the one hundred and eightieth section."

Section 5 of the Hindu Wills Act is as follows: "Nothing contained in this Act shall affect the rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General of Bengal, Madras and Bombay, respectively." The rights, duties and privileges of the Administrator-General were then contained within the four corners of the Act of 1867, and that Act related to nothing else. I think that the reasonable construction of s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act is that the provisions of the Administrator-General's Act were to remain as if the Hindu Wills Act had not been passed. The ordinary grammatical meaning of the word "affect" is to act upon, or to produce an effect upon. In some Statutes it may appear from the context, that "affect" means "act injuriously upon." But in the Hindu Wills Act there is nothing in the context to give it such a qualified meaning. I think also that in construing this section it is proper to take into consideration the argument that it is unreasonable to suppose that the Legislature would have by implication, and not by express words, so largely increased the operation of s. 30 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867, and thus have made such a radical change in the powers of the executors of a large number, in fact the majority, of the inhabitants of this country. The Legislature was then by the Hindu Wills Act adding in express terms to the power of Hindu executors. If they had intended to add the further, and that a most important, power of transferring the property of testators to the Administrator-General, they would have done so in express words. I think we must hold that the Hindu Wills Act did not alter the construction of s. 30 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867, and did not make that section applicable to Hindus.

There remains the fourth question. As I have said before s. 31 of the Act of 1874 is identical in words with s. 30 of the Act of 1867. So the position is reduced to this: The Legislature knowing, as I must take it they did, that s. 30 of the Act of 1867 had no application to Hindus, even at the [775] time when the Act of 1874 was under their consideration, re-enacted s. 30 in identical terms; therefore it follows, I think, that the new section was intended to apply to the same persons as the old section, even after the passing of the Hindu Wills Act referred to. I think this is a necessary inference from the identity of terms. If the Legislature had intended that s. 31 should give to the executors of Hindus powers which they did not possess when it was enacted, they would have said so. Again here, in seeking to discover the intentions of the Legislature, I think I am right in assuming that they would not by implication have introduced such a radical change in the law.

There is not in the Act of 1874 any indication that the Legislature intended that s. 31 of that Act should bear a different construction from s. 30 of the Act of 1867. Furthermore in construing the Act of 1874, I think that s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act precludes us from considering the change made in the position of the executor of a Hindu will by the Hindu Wills Act. In my opinion for these reasons s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1874 did not alter the law which existed at the time it was passed. Reference was made during the argument to the Probate and Administration Act of 1881, but in the first place the terms of s. 148 of that Act prevent its application to this case, and in the second place it is difficult to see how it can throw any light on the earlier Act of 1874.

We were referred during the argument to the history of the Act of 1874 in its transition through the Legislature. Although the Courts here have sought to find assistance from sources of this kind, I have personally always felt the danger of depending to any substantial extent upon any such aid to the construction of an Act of the Legislature. As pointed out in p. 105 of Wilberforce on Statutes, such a reference is inadmissible in England. But in this country reference has frequently been made to sources of this sort, and in the comparatively recent Full Bench decision of Queen-Empress v. Kartick Chunder Das (1) the judgment depended in the main on the Report of a Select Committee. The Full Bench judgment contains the following passage: "But we thought it right from [776] the proceedings of the Legislative Council at the time this measure was in preparation to obtain such light as they could throw on the intention and scope of the section in question. Such a course has been more than once taken by the Court here in recent times; and in a case of such difficulty and importance as this appeared to be, we felt bound to adopt it." All I need say is that, if such a reference were admissible, what was shown to us would incline me to the same construction as that which I have put upon the Act without such reference. I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Sale in the Court below and consider that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Second Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act, Chapter X, ss 104, cl. 2, 106, 107, 108, cl. 2—Dispute as to entries in record of rights—Question as to status of ryots—Order of Special Judge on appeal from Settlement Officer—Civil Procedure Code, s. 622.

Under Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act there is to be (1) a framing of the record of rights, (2) a draft publication for a period of one month during which time objections may be preferred, and (3) a final publication, previous to which publication "disputes" as to the correctness of the entries in the record of rights, other than entries of rents settled, are to be heard and decided. Under s. 107 the decisions of the Settlement Officer in all proceedings under the chapter are to have the force of decrees, and under s. 108, cl. 2, an appeal lies to the Special Judge from all decisions of the Settlement Officer; but it is only in cases under s. 106 decided by the Special Judge on appeal from the Settlement Officer that a second appeal [777] lies to the High Court, and such cases can only relate to disputes regarding the correctness of entries other than the entries of rent settled.

Where a decision of the Settlement Officer in a case under s. 104, cl. 2 of the Act dealt with the question of the status of the ryots, and was passed before the record had been framed; and after the record had been framed there was no dispute as to the correctness of any entry, except the entries of the rent settled: Held, that the order of the Special Judge on appeal from such decision of the Settlement Officer was not one passed in a case under s. 106, and therefore no second appeal lay from it to the High Court.—Shewbarat Koer v. Nirpat Roy (1) and Lala Kirat Narain v. Palakdhari Pandey (2) referred to.

Held, also, that the case was not one which required the interference of the High Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code.

[Overruled, 24 C. 462 (F.B.); F., 22 C. 477; R., 28 C. 471 (474).]

THE suits out of which these appeals arose were brought under s. 104, cl. (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for settlement of the rent and for determination of the status of the ryots. The plaintiffs claimed at different rates for the various classes of land, which varied from Re. 1 to Rs. 8 per bigha for the year. The defendants who appeared, on the other hand, alleged that they were paying at a rate which gave an average of Re. 1-8 per bigha for the year, or Rs. 6-4 per 4 bighas 5 cottahs 12 chittacks. Some of the cases were heard ex parte. The Settlement Officer fixed the following issues: (1) What are the fair rents? (2) What is the status of defendants? And after dealing with the evidence, oral and documentary, which was brought before him, he, on the 8th December 1891, decided the first issue in favour of the plaintiffs' contention, and the second issue, as to the status of the defendants, in favour of the defendants, and held that this decision should govern the ex parte cases as well as those which were contested.

Subsequently on 19th February 1892 another proceeding was held by the Settlement Officer at which he took some further evidence, and made the following order:—

* Appeal from Appellate Decrees Nos. 2148 and 2149 of 1892 against the decree of J. Pratt, Esq., Special Judge of Midnapore, dated the 1st of September 1892, reversing the decree of Babu Rajendra Nath Bose, the Settlement Officer of Midnapore, dated the 8th December 1891.

"It appears to me that certain lands in the khatian have been assessed at the rates for the higher classes of lands, and that all tanks have been assessed at Rs. 8 the bigha when the rates vary from Re. 1 to Rs. 8. Ordered that the mistakes made should be corrected—" thereby altering the rates fixed by him on 8th December 1891.

Appeals were filed from these orders by the tenants (defendants) from that of 8th December 1891, and by the landlords (plaintiffs) [778] from that of 19th February 1892, and were heard by the Special Judge. He came to the conclusion on the defendants' appeals that "on the materials before him the Settlement Officer was not justified in deciding the rates as he did, and so the appeals of the tenants must prevail." As to the order of 19th February 1894 the Special Judge held that it was ultra vires, and that the appeals in respect of it must be allowed. He said :—

"The result is that all the appeals are allowed ; the Settlement Officer's assessment and revised assessment are set aside, and matters must remain as they were ; the record of rights, so far as regards the rents payable by each tenant, being declared null and void. I have no proper materials on which to determine what ought to be the rents or rates of rent. If the landlords desire further enquiry they will have to pay for it. It will no longer be open to them to adduce evidence as to existing rates ; the enquiry would be directed to ascertaining fair rents. All parties to pay their own costs of these appeals."

From this decision the plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Debendro Nath Ghose, for the appellants.

Bahoo Umakali Mukerjee and Baboo Srish Chunder Chowdhry, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

The facts of these cases have not been fully or clearly stated by the lower Courts. It has, therefore, been very difficult for us to understand what has actually taken place.

We find, however, that there were two suits. Nos. 42 and 43, under s. 104 (d) of the Bengal Tenancy Act brought before the Settlement Officer of Midnapore on the 26th September 1891.

The plaintiffs in these suits were (1) the Masants who were co-sharer-landlords to the extent of 13 annas in respect of the lands held by the defendants ; and (2) the Court of Wards who represented two minors who were the co-sharer-landlords of the remaining 3 annas share. The defendants in suit No. 42 were 119 ryots, and in suit No. 43 were 311 ryots of the mouzahs Maguri and Jagannathchak, pargana Kashijora.

The parties in the proceedings before the Settlement Officer were at issue as to two points : (1) as to the status of the defendants, and (2) as to the rates of rent payable by them. The [779] Settlement Officer, by his decision of the 8th December 1891, gave the first point in favour of the defendants, and the second in favour of the plaintiffs.

We have been told that subsequently on the 10th December, 1891, the Settlement Officer issued a notice, under rule 33 of the Government rules under the Tenancy Act ; that on the 10th January 1892 he published the draft khatian ; that on the 11th idem he issued a notice under rule 34 ; and on the 18th February 1892 he finally published the khatian or record of rights. Then on the 19th February 1892, that is, the day after the final publication of the khatian, he recorded the evidence of one Aftabuddin Mahomed, manager under the Court of Wards, who said that the lands had been assessed at rates higher than the ryots would be able to pay, upon which on that date, the 19th, and the following date, the 20th, he reduced the assessment on tanks and dobas to Re. 1 instead of Rs. 8 as before.

Meantime, on the 2nd February 1892, both the Masant landlords and certain of the defendants had appealed to the Special Judge.

The Masant landlord's appeals were numbered 236 and 237, and the tenants' appeals were numbered 119 and 120. But the Court of Wards did not appeal on behalf of the minors, and out of the 311 defendants in suit No. 43 only 45 appealed.

We have not been told how many of the defendants out of the 119 defendants in suit No. 43 have appealed in special appeal No. 2149, and on the view of the case which we take this point is not material.

The Special Judge decreed all the appeals. He held the revised assessment by the Settlement Officer on the 19th and 20th February to have been ultra vires, and he set it aside. He also set aside the assessment of the 8th December 1891, and declared that the record of rights as regards the rent payable by each tenant was null and void. He further ordered that "if the landlords desire further enquiry they will have to pay for it. It will no longer be open to them to adduce evidence as to existing rates. The enquiry would be directed to ascertaining fair rents."

Two further facts remain to be noted, viz., (1) that on the 25th November 1892, an application in respect of this matter was made to this Court under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure [780] Code, but was rejected by Tottenham and Ameer Ali, JJ.; and (2) that on the 14th December 1892, the Masant plaintiffs applied to the Settlement Officer for a re-enquiry, apparently in pursuance of the Special Judge's order of the 1st September 1892.

Now, the Masant plaintiffs appeal to this Court in special appeals Nos. 2148 and 2149, and urge—(1) that the order of the Special Judge was wrong, inasmuch as it set aside the Settlement Officer's decree, not only as against the defendants who appealed to him, but as against the remaining defendants who did not appeal, including 6 (Nos. 1, 17, 106, 117, 124 and 282), who, it is said, admitted the rates of rent claimed from them by the plaintiffs; and (2) that as regards the tenants who did appeal, their appeal was not ripe for hearing and should not have been heard by the Special Judge.

On the other hand, on behalf of the respondents, i.e., the whole of the defendants, who have all been made respondents, a preliminary objection is urged to the effect that no appeal lies, as the decision of the lower appellate Court deals with the question of the rate of rent only and with no other question.

We must dispose of this preliminary objection in the first instance, and it seems to us that we must give effect to it. No doubt, as has been contended by the learned Counsel for the appellants, the decision of the Settlement Officer of the 8th December 1891 disposed of a question of the ryots' status as well as of the question of the rates of rent payable by them, but we do not think that there was any "dispute" on this point within the meaning of s. 106 as between the parties so as to give a right of second appeal to this Court.

It must be admitted that the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act are somewhat obscure as regards the procedure to be followed in cases under the chapter ; but, as far as we understand them, there is to be (1) a framing of the record of rights; (2) a draft publication for a period of one month, during which time "objections" may be preferred; and (3) a final publication, previous to which publication "disputes" as to the correctness of the entries in the record of rights other than entries of rents settled are to be heard and decided.

[781] Under s. 107 the decisions of the Settlement Officer in all proceedings under the chapter are to have the force of a decree, and under s. 108, cl. 2, an appeal lies to the Special Judge from all decisions of the Settlement Officer. But it is only in cases under s. 106 decided by the Special Judge that a second appeal lies to this Court, and such cases can only relate to disputes regarding the correctness of entries other than entries of rent settled.

Now, it is clear that the decision of the Special Judge appealed against in the present cases was not passed in cases under s. 106. The decision of the Settlement Officer of the 8th December 1891 was the only one which dealt with the question of the status of the ryots. This was no doubt a decision in a proceeding under Chapter X, but it was not a decision in a case under s. 106. It was passed before the record had been framed. After the record had been framed there was no dispute as to the correctness of any entry except the entry of the rent settled, and hence it seems to us no second appeal lies to this Court. See the cases of Shewbarat Koer v. Nirpat Roy (1) and Lala Kirat Narain v. Palukdhari Pandey (2), which have been followed in several unreported cases (3).

We have been asked if in our opinion no appeal lies in these cases to deal with the memoranda of appeal as if they were applications under s. 622, Civil Procedure Code. But we cannot do so for the reason that an application under s. 622 with regard to this matter has already been rejected by this Court, viz., on the 25th November 1892. Circumstances have not altered since that application was refused, and from any point of view we do not think that this is a case in which the ends of justice require that we should interfere under s. 622.

We therefore dismiss these appeals.

This order will direct that the appellants do pay the costs of the respondents.

The trial of a British seaman for an offence committed on a British ship on the High Seas must be conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure, though the offence charged must be an offence under English law.

[R., 4 Bur. L.T. 58=12 Cr.L.J. 198=10 Ind. Cas. 705=5 L.B.R. 221.]

THIS was a reference by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under the provisions of s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it was in the following terms:—

"EMPRESS on the prosecution of HENRY THOMPSON, Steward of the British Ship "Lord Brassey" v. CAPTAIN GUNNING, Master of the said ship.

"SIR.—I have the honour to refer the following under the provisions of s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for the opinion of the High Court.

"2. The accused in the above case is charged under ss. 323 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code with having, during the month of October last, voluntarily caused hurt to the complainant, and intentionally insulted and thereby given provocation to him, intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation would cause him to break the public peace on board the British ship "Lord Brassey" while on the high seas. The question arising is:—

"Whether the accused must be tried under the English law or whether he can be tried under the Indian Penal Code.

"I would call their Lordships' attention to Queen-Empress v. Abdool Rahiman (1) and Queen-Empress v. Barton (2).

The Standing Counsel (Mr. Phillips), appeared on behalf of the Crown.

The accused was not represented.

Mr. Phillips.—The accused in this case is charged under ss. 323 and 504 of the Indian Penal Code. The allegation is that these offences were committed in the month of October last on board the British ship "Lord Brassey" while on the High Seas. The question for determination is whether the accused must be tried [783] under the English law or the law as it is administered in this country, i.e., under the Penal Code.

I submit that according to the cases in this Court the offence must be an offence under the English law, but the trial must be conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure, and the punishment must be also regulated by the local law. With regard to the first point, it is clear that if the accused is guilty of any offence, it is by reason of the general Admiralty Jurisdiction, or under 17 and 18 Vic., cap. 104, s. 267, or 18 and 19 Vic., cap. 91, s. 21: see the case of The Queen v. Anderson (1); see also 12 and 13 Vic., cap. 96, s. 1. This statute was extended to India by 23 and 24 Vic., cap. 88, s. 1. The statute was discussed in The Queen v. Thompson (2). It was held (see page 9 of the report) that the offence was punishable according to English law, and also that the substance of the offence must be one recognized by English law. In that case, however, the accused was not charged as a British seaman or as a British subject, but as a person who was in a British ship. The provisions of the enactments above mentioned were extended to all persons on a British ship by 30 and 31 Vic., cap. 124, ss. 2 and 11.

The other cases on this subject are: Reg. v. Elmstone (3), and Queen-Empress v. Barton (4). In the first of these cases it was laid down that the procedure applicable in such cases is the ordinary Criminal Procedure of this country. That case however lays down that the law of England is to be regarded as the law of India as regards punishment. The case of Queen-Empress v. Barton (4) also decides that the trial is to be held according to the Criminal Procedure of this country.

OPINION.

This is a reference made by the Chief Presidency Magistrate for the town of Calcutta under s. 432 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In it he states that Henry Thomson, a steward of the British ship "Lord Brassey," charged Captain Gunning, master of the said ship, with offences committed on the high seas under ss. 323 and 504, Indian Penal Code, and he asks whether [784] the accused must be tried under the English law, or whether he can be tried under the Indian Penal Code.

It would appear from the case of Queen v. Anderson (1), if Captain Gunning is guilty of any offence, it is because of the General Admiralty Jurisdiction or under 17 and 18 Vic., cap. 104, s. 267 or 18 and 19 Vic., cap. 91, s. 21. In each case the offence of which he must be tried is an offence under English law. In the case of Reg. v. Mount (5), a question arose not as to the nature of the offence but as to the amount of punishment that should be inflicted. All doubts on that point are now settled by 37 and 38 Vic., cap. 27. The answer, therefore, is that the trial must be conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure, though the offence charged must be an offence under English law.

KISHORE BUN MOHUNT v. PROSONNOCOOMAR ADHIKARI.
[28th February, 1894.]

Execution of decree—Execution under s. 260, Civil Procedure Code, Act XIV of 1882, —Refusal of execution where opportunity to obey the decree had not been afforded by the decree-holders—Effect of such refusal—Subsequent order for execution.

An order of a Court dismissed a petition for execution under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code because the petitioning decree-holders had not then afforded to the judgment-debtor an opportunity of obeying the decree, which directed him to do specific acts. Held, (1) that another application, made after such opportunity had been afforded to him, was not barred as having been matter of prior adjudication within s. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code ; (2) that the decree which also declared rights on the part of the decree-holders against him was not incapable of being executed under s. 260, on the objection that it was only declaratory.

[R., 33 C. 306 = 3 C.L.J. 112 = 10 C.W.N. 297 ; 17 M.L.J. 423 (428) (F.B.)]

Two appeals upon petitions for execution of a decree, dated 31st March 1881. The first appeal from an order (5th September 1890) of the High Court, reversing an order (30th March [785] 1889) of the District Judge of Chittagong, who had affirmed an order (25th May 1886) of the Munsif of Sitakund. The second appeal from an order (3rd December 1890) of the High Court, affirming an order (8th November 1889) of the Judge of the same district, varying an order (23rd March 1889) of the Munsif of the same place.

Two questions were raised on these appeals : In the first, whether the respondents were not precluded from asserting their right, as they did, to execute a decree under the 260th section, Civil Procedure Code, by a previous adjudication, within s. 13 ; in the second, whether the decree, of which execution was sought, was not merely declaratory of a right, so that it was, therefore, incapable of being executed in the manner applied for under s. 260.

The appellant was the mohunt of a religious institution, established in a temple, at which the respondents were adhikara pandas, or officiating priests. The latter claimed the right denied by the appellant to perform the religious service at the temple for a period in each year, and to receive a share of the offerings, darshani. On the 31st March 1881, a decree was made in their favour, and it was to the execution of this decree that both the appeals related. The respondents in the first appeal had, when this decree was obtained, joined with them as one of the co-plaintiffs, the father, Akhilchunder Adhikari, deceased in 1887, of the respondent in the second of these appeals, Prosonnocoomar Adhikari. This decree, made by the Munsif in Chittagong, declared the right of the plaintiffs as against Kishore Bun Mohunt, the defendant, now appellant, to have, for the purposes of performing the ceremonies, which they were entitled to perform, certain articles supplied to them by him, and a proportionate part of the offerings made over to them by him; and costs of the suit, with interest, were decreed. Execution of this decree was first applied for on the 10th August 1885, by arrest of the defendant, under s. 260, Civil Procedure Code. The result was a refusal of the execution, by an order made on the 19th December 1887.

The orders made on appeal from this order, both in the District Court and on a second appeal to the High Court, appear, in their series, in their Lordships' judgment. While those proceedings were [786] pending, Akhilchunder died in June 1867, leaving his only heir Prosonnocomar Adhikari, the respondent in the second appeal. The latter filed his own petition under s. 260 for execution of the decree of 31st March 1860, on the 25th November 1887; the defendant, now appellant objecting among other objections that the decree being merely declaratory could not be executed in the manner provided by s. 260. These objections were disallowed, and the execution under that section was ordered by the Munsif on the 1st March 1888. The District Judge affirmed substantially this order, with a slight alteration as to the articles to be supplied. But on the 24th August 1888, on a second appeal, preferred to the High Court, a Divisional Bench ordered execution to issue in the usual way.

Afterwards, on the 13th February 1889, the respondent Prosonnocomar made the application for execution, which, after proceeding to the High Court on appeal, and being then disposed of in his favour, led to the present appeal. The execution ordered was under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code.

On these appeals—

Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant argued that, on the first of the two appeals, the High Court had not given due effect to the order of the 19th December 1887, which, as a prior adjudication, had barred the subsequent order. In reference to the other appeal, he relied on the declaratory nature of the decree of the 31st March 1881.

The respondents did not appear.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was delivered by

LORD MORRIS.—Both these appeals have been argued before their Lordships ex parte.

In the appeal of Kishore Bun Mohunt v. Dwarkanath Adhikari and others a judgment of the High Court at Calcutta is impeached, which reversed a judgment of the District Judge of Chittagong, who had upheld, with a variation, a judgment of the Munsif of Sitakund.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows: In the year 1880 the respondents, who are officiating priests in the temple of a deity called Sumbu Nath Deb instituted a suit in the Munsif's Court against the appellant for the purpose of establishing their right [787] to perform certain offices at the shrine and to receive certain offerings from the votaries. On the 31st March 1881 a decree was made by the Munsif, by which the claim of the respondents was allowed, and the appellant was ordered to deliver to the respondents certain articles necessary for the performance of the offices in question, and the right of the respondents to the offerings claimed was decreed. This decree was not complied with, and in the year 1885 respondents applied to the Munsif for leave to execute it under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appellant contended that the decree was merely declaratory and was not capable of execution as prayed.

Section 260 provides as follows: "When the party against whom a decree for specific performance of a contract, or for restitution of conjugal rights, or for the performance of or abstention from any other particular act, has been made, has had an opportunity of obeying the decree or injunction and has wilfully failed to obey it, the decree may be enforced by his imprisonment, or by the attachment of his property, or by both."

The Munsif gave judgment on the 25th May 1886, ordering the decree to be executed. There was an appeal from the Munsif to the District Judge of Chittagong, who, on the 24th March 1887, modified the Munsif's judgment, and directed the decree to be executed in part only. Both parties appealed to the High Court, and the High Court, on the 19th December 1887, delivered judgment in these terms: "The order of the lower Court appealed against in the appeal from Appellate Order No. 112 of 1887 will be set aside, and that appealed against in the appeal from Appellate Order No. 194 of 1887 will stand confirmed. We express no opinion as to whether or not the decree is capable of execution."

On the 1st February 1888 the respondents again petitioned the Munsif for execution of the decree, stating in their petition that they had, since their first action, served the appellant with notice, and had presented themselves at the temple at certain times specified in the notice, in order that they might be allowed the opportunity of performing a certain ceremony, and receiving certain articles necessary for its performance, and so afford the appellant an opportunity of complying with the decree.

[788] The appellant did not supply the articles in question, and objected to the petition on the ground that it was barred as being res judicata. The Munsif held that the matter was res judicata and dismissed the petition. The respondents appealed to the District Judge of Chittagong, who affirmed the decision of the Munsif on the question of res judicata while reversing it in another respect. Both sides appealed to the High Court, who reversed the decision of the District Judge, and declared that the respondents were entitled to enforce their decree under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code, and ordered execution to issue accordingly.

The High Court pointed out in their judgment that their decree in the first suit was only intended to determine that the particular application for execution, then the subject of appeal, could not be allowed. The respondent had not at that time placed themselves in the position of having the right to have their decree executed, inasmuch as they had not given notice to the appellant, and so afforded him an opportunity of complying with it. They had not gone to the temple so as to be ready to receive the articles necessary for the performance of the ceremony if they were offered to them. That matter of fact distinguished the second suit entirely from the first.

It is therefore quite plain, in their Lordships' opinion, that the question was not res judicata. Their Lordships think that the respondents were properly non-suited in the first action, because they had not then shown that there was a demand made by them on the appellant, and an opportunity thus given him of complying with the decree. In the second action they remedied this defect, and stated in their petition that they had given the appellant notice of their demand, and had duly presented themselves at the temple. The appellant in his petition of objection does not deny this, merely taking the formal objection that the notice was illegal and improper; but the fact of the notice having been given, and of the respondents having presented themselves at the temple in pursuance of it, was never denied, and was, in fact, taken for granted throughout the trial. Indeed, those fresh facts constituted the difference between the two actions. [789] An objection was taken on the part of the appellant before their Lordships that the notice was not properly before the High Court, and that the High Court was not warranted in assuming its existence. But it is necessary, in considering such an objection, taken at so late a stage, to look carefully at the proceedings in the Courts below; and it is clear to their Lordships that throughout the whole course of the trial the fact of the notice having been given was admitted.

On these grounds their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the judgment of the High Court should be affirmed, and they will humbly advise Her Majesty accordingly.

In the appeal of Kishore Bun Mohunt v. Prosonnocomar Adhikari, the question of res judicata does not arise at all; but it is said that the decree was merely a declaratory one, which could not be executed under s. 260 of the Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships have no doubt that it is a decree which can be executed, and that the High Court were right in dismissing the appeal from the District Judge who had directed the execution to issue. Indeed, it has not been substantially argued that if the first appeal fails this appeal can succeed.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss this appeal.

APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Rampini.

BHAGBUT LALL (Decree-holder, Auction-purchaser) v. NARKU ROY (Judgment-debtor)* [2nd April, 1894.]

Second appeal—Order setting aside sale under s. 294, Civil Procedure Code, 1882—Purchase by decree-holder without permission to bid at sale in execution of his decree—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 244, 588.

No second appeal lies from an order made by a District Judge, on appeal, setting aside a sale under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code, notwithstanding that s. 244 bars a separate suit in such a case; that section (244), whilst it precludes a right of suit, does not enlarge the right of appeal, which is limited strictly by s. 588.

[790] IN this case Bhagbut Lall had obtained a decree against Narku Roy, in execution of which certain property of the judgment-debtor was sold and was purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 40. An application was thereupon made by the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside on the grounds that the decree-holder had not obtained permission to bid for and purchase the property; and that there had been irregularity in the conduct of the sale which had resulted in the property being sold for an inadequate price, and consequent substantial injury to the judgment-debtor.

* Appeal from Order No. 201 of 1893, against the order of J. Kelleher, Esq., District Judge of Sarun, dated 11th of April 1893, reversing the order of Babu Upendro Nath Bose, Munsif of Chupra, dated the 21st of January 1893.

The Munsif found that there had been no irregularity in the conduct of the sale, and that the price for which the property was sold was not inadequate. He held, moreover, that though there was nothing on the record to show that permission was given to the decree-holder to purchase, yet there was sufficient evidence to show that he had such permission. He therefore rejected the application. On appeal the Judge reversed the Munsif's decision on the ground that the finding as to inadequacy of price was founded on insufficient materials, and that the decree-holder had purchased the property without permission. The sale was therefore set aside.

The decree-holder appealed to the High Court.

Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Boykant Nath Dass, for the appellant.

Babu Aubinash Chunder Banerjee and Babu Makhun Lall, for the respondent.

The objection was taken that no appeal lay.

JUDGMENT.

The question involved in this appeal is extremely simple, although a considerable time has been occupied in its argument. The decree-holder appears to have purchased the property belonging to his judgment-debtor in execution of his decree. The judgment-debtor applied to have the sale set aside on various grounds—amongst others on the ground that the decree-holder had purchased the property without obtaining the permission of the Court. The Munsif before whom this application was made rejected it. On appeal the District Judge has, on the ground that the purchase was made by the decree-holder without the permission of the Court, set aside the sale. So far as the question of permission is concerned, whether the permission was [791] obtained or not the finding of the learned Judge is one of fact into which we cannot enter. The decree-holder has appealed to this Court, and an objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent that no second appeal lies from the order of the District Judge under s. 294. Mr. Gregory who appears for the appellant has argued that the question between the parties falls under s. 244, and therefore, independently of any provisions in the Code and irrespective of s. 294, he has a right to a second appeal. Now s. 294 provides that no holder of a decree, in execution of which property is sold, shall, without the express permission of the Court, bid for or purchase the property, and cl. 3 of that section provides that when a decree-holder purchases, by himself or through another person, without such permission, the Court may, if it thinks fit, on the application of the judgment-debtor or any other person interested in the sale, by order set aside the sale. Section 588, cl. 16, gives an appeal from orders under s. 294, and the last clause of s. 588 provides that an order passed in appeal under this section shall be final. Therefore, unless the matter comes under any other provision of the Code, it is clear that there is only one appeal and no more. Section 244, referred to as justifying the second appeal, declares that all questions arising between the parties to a suit in execution should be dealt with by orders of the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit, and the case of Viraraghava v. Venkata (1), to which Mr. Gregory has referred, shows that in a case when an order is made under s. 294 the judgment-debtor cannot proceed by separate suit, because the matter falls under s. 244 ; but that case does not show that s. 244 enlarges the right of appeal, which is restricted by s. 588. It is clear that s. 588, cl. 16, is restrictive in its character, and gives one appeal only to the parties aggrieved or dissatisfied with any order confirming, setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale of immoveable property. To suggest that because s. 244 precludes a right of suit it enlarges the right of appeal is untenable and no authority is shown for it.

As at present advised we think that no second appeal lies from this order, and we therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1892), s. 35—Mortgagee—Actionable claim—Assignment of mortgage—Liability of mortgagor—Steps to be taken by mortgagor to obtain benefit of s. 135.

A mortgage is an actionable claim under s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act.

In order to obtain the benefit of that section the mortgagor must pay " the price and incidental expenses, &c., with interest " into Court either in or before the action—Muchiram Barik v. Ishan Chandra Chuckerbutty (1) followed.

Where a mortgagor some months after suit was brought tendered the amount due, on the assignment of the mortgage to the assignee, and the tender was refused and no actual payment was made into Court. Held by PETHERAM, C.J., NORRIS and O'KINEALY, JJ. (affirming the judgment of HILL, J.) that under the circumstances the mortgagor was not entitled to the benefit of s. 135.

APPEAL from a decision of Hill, J., dated the 8th March 1892.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was a suit on a mortgage in English form, dated 20th September 1889, executed by the defendant Russick Lall Pal in his personal capacity, and by Russick Lall Pal and the defendant Preonath Sen as executor of the will of one Lalmoni Dasi, deceased, in favour of one Joggeessur Sen, for the sum of Rs. 5,500. The plaint stated that this mortgage was on 27th July 1891 assigned by Joggeessur Sen to the plaintiff ; that on or about the 13th August 1891 the plaintiff, through his attorneys Messrs. Swinhoe and Chunder, called on the defendant to pay to him the amount due on the mortgage ; and that thereupon the defendant Russick Lall Pal through his attorney Mr. Dover, expressed his willingness to do so, and requested the plaintiff's attorney to furnish him with a statement of account showing the account due to the plaintiff in respect thereof ; that the plaintiff's attorneys sent a statement of account showing the sum of Rs. 6,698-9-6 (being Rs. 5,500 for principal and Rs. 1,198-9-6 for interest) [793] then due on the mortgage. This not being paid, the suit was brought on 2nd September 1891.

^{*} Original Appeal No. 12 of 1892.

From the written statement of the defendant Russick Lall Pal which was filed on 6th March 1892, it appears that after the institution of the suit he first became aware that the sum of Rs. 6,200 only had been paid by the plaintiff on the assignment of the mortgage; that on 1st February 1892 he handed to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 6,680 (being the sum of Rs. 6,200 with incidental expenses of the assignment and with interest on the price from the day the plaintiff paid it), but the plaintiff refused to accept it, stating that a sum of Rs. 8,067-1-1 was due to him from the defendant. The defendant Russick Lall Pal submitted that he was entitled to the benefit of the provisions of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that the said sum of Rs. 6,680 should have been accepted by the plaintiff in full discharge of the liability of the defendant under the assignment.

The defendants Russick Lall Pal and Preonath Sen on 23rd November 1891, filed a written statement in their capacity as executors of the will of Lalmoni Dasi, in which they denied any liability as such executors to the plaintiff under the mortgage. It appeared that Lalmoni Dasi died in May 1888 leaving a will made shortly before her death of which she made these two defendants the executors, and probate of the will had been granted to them as such executors; that by the will certain legacies were given and Rs. 4,000 directed to be set apart out of the estate for the support of an idol, and the defendant Russick Lall Pal was made residuary legatee; that after the legacies had been paid, the defendants as the executors assented to the bequest to Russick Lall Pal in consideration of his paying the sum of Rs. 4,000 to the executors to be held for the purposes and trusts directed by the will; that this sum was paid to them out of the consideration money for the mortgage, and that they as such executors joined in the mortgage for the purpose only of recording their assent, and of confirming to the mortgagee, at the request of Russick Lall Pal, and for the consideration so paid by him to them, the residue of the estate and property of Lalmoni Dasi comprised in the mortgage; and that out of the sum of Rs. 4,000, Rs. 3,500 was advanced to Russick Lall Pal by Preonath Sen as one of the executors of the will on the [794] security of a second mortgage executed by Russick Lall Pal in favour of Preonath Sen as such executor of all the property comprised in the mortgage of 20th September 1889.

The other material facts, as they appeared in the correspondence and other documentary evidence, are sufficiently stated in the judgment appealed from which was as follows:—

"This is a suit by the assignee of the mortgage for the enforcement of a mortgage in the English form bearing date the 20th September 1889. The suit is brought against one Russick Lall Pal, in his personal capacity and as executor of one Lalmoni Dasi deceased, and also against Preonath Sen in his individual capacity and as executor of that lady. It appears that the lady in question by her will, after giving certain pecuniary legacies, directed that a sum of Rs. 4,000 be raised from her estate for the worship of an idol, and she made Russick Lall Pal her residuary legatee. The executors having paid the pecuniary legacies referred to gave their assent to the legacy to Russick Lall Pal on condition of his paying them Rs. 4,000 for the purposes and upon the trusts created by the will. Subsequently a portion of the Rs. 4,000, viz., Rs. 3,500, was advanced by Preonath Sen and Russick Lall Pal to the latter on a second mortgage of the estate with power to secure the sum for the idol by a mortgage.

"There is no question as to the mortgage; it is admitted; and the assignment to the plaintiff which took place on 29th July 1891 is also admitted; and the only question which has been contested here is as to whether Russick Lall Pal, the mortgagor, is entitled to avail himself of the provisions of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act and further there are questions of costs.

"It is contended on the part of the plaintiff that the provisions of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act are not applicable, at all events, in the case of a mortgage in the English form. It is further contended, assuming that the provisions of s. 135 are applicable to a mortgage in the English form, that the Court ought not to give effect to the mortgagor's contentions in this case, because he has not exercised that amount of diligence in the ascertainment of his right which the law requires where a person seeks to avail himself of the section. As to the first question, namely, the applicability of s. 135 to a mortgage [795] in the English form, I can see no distinction in principle between the case, in the first place, of a debtor who owes money on his own personal responsibility, and a debtor who owes money secured by mortgage. I can see no reason why, if in the one case, the debtor may discharge himself by payment of the actual amount of consideration and incidental costs, he ought not to be able to do so in the other case. Nor in the second place can I see that there is any substantial or material distinction between the case of a mortgage in the English form and a mortgage in any other form provided for in the Transfer of Property Act. In each case the mortgage is but a security for the payment of a debt, and if the debt is discharged, the security goes with it.

"However it is perhaps unnecessary, in the view I have taken of this case, that I should go more minutely into the question, because I think Russick Lall Pal has not made out a case which brings him within the provisions of s. 135. That the mortgagee is entitled, notwithstanding the assignment, to claim the full amount of the mortgage, has been established by cases in this Court; and, in order to avail himself of the provisions of s. 135, the mortgagor, or other debtor, must bring himself within the principles laid down by this Court in the case of Khoshdeb Biswas v. Satar Mondol (1). In that case the learned Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Tottenham followed an earlier decision of this Court in Grish Chandra v. Kashisauri Debi (2), and laid down the principle by which cases of the kind are governed in the following words: "We think however that if the money paid by the plaintiff for the claim, with interest and expenses, were paid into Court immediately on the suit being brought, that would be a payment within the meaning of the section and would release the defendant from further liability." The rule thus laid down must no doubt be applied with a certain degree of elasticity, but the principle appears to be clear enough, that in order to avail himself of the provisions of s. 135 the debtor must take his measures at the earliest opportunity.

"Now here what happened was this: The suit was instituted on the 2nd September 1891. Previously to that there was a letter of demand for the amount due on the mortgage and costs. [796] On the 19th August 1891, the defendant's solicitor replied asking to be informed what the amount due on the assignment actually was, and on the 21st August 1891, the plaintiff's solicitors replied sending them a statement of account showing what was due for principal, interest and costs under the mortgage. It was contended by Mr. Sale for the mortgagor that the correspondence was conducted by the solicitors with advertence to s. 135. What the mortgagor's solicitors wanted to ascertain was what was paid in respect of the assignment and what was due. The contention is that the letter of the 21st August 1891 was a misleading letter, because what the mortgagor's solicitors wanted to prove when he asked for a statement of the account was the actual state of things existing in respect of the assignment as distinguished from the mortgage. But it appears to me unlikely in a high degree that the parties at that stage had s. 135 in their minds. What happened was a demand for payment of the amount due on the mortgage followed by an enquiry by the mortgagors as to what was the actual amount due. Whatever may have been the intention with which the mortgagor's solicitor wrote the letter of 19th August 1891, which expressed the readiness of the mortgagor to pay off whatever was due, no payment was made, and the suit was instituted on the 2nd September 1891.

"When the suit was brought, both parties were ignorant of their real position under the assignment. They had it not in their minds. The suit was brought under the impression that the assignee had the right to sue for the whole account due under the mortgage. I cannot ascribe to the mortgagee's solicitor any intention whatever to deceive. I think he was entitled to make the claim in the way he made it, and there is nothing whatever to lead me to suppose that the mortgagee's solicitors corresponded with the mortgagor's solicitors on the basis of a different state of things from that on which the latter corresponded with the former. What happens then is this : From the 2nd September 1891 to February 1892 nothing whatever was done by Russick Lall Pal for the purpose of asserting his right. In November 1891 a written statement was filed by the executors to the estate of Lalmoni Dasi, and it appears to me, having regard to the circumstances that this suit was based on the assignment, and that [797] the assignment was referred to in the plaint, and that the plaintiff carved leave to treat it as part of his plaint, that the defendants had ample notice of the character of the suit, and it was their clear duty to avail themselves of the defence now set up to enable the plaintiff, at all events, shortly after this suit was instituted, to make such enquiries as would enable him to see his true position. But Russick Lall Pal informs us in his evidence that he concerned himself in no way about the matter, and he was ignorant that he was entitled to discharge himself by payment of the sum due on the assignment. It seems to me it is incumbent on the person who seeks to avail himself of s. 135 to take the earliest opportunity of doing so ; and applying this test I do not think that Russick Lall Pal has used that degree of diligence which the case demands.

"The consequence is that his defence under s. 135 fails and the ordinary mortgage decree will be made. As to costs, as far as Russick Lall Pal is concerned, I see no ground for departing from the ordinary rule, but in the case of the executors I think the plaintiff ought to pay their costs. The scale of costs will be No. 2."

From this decision the defendant Romanath Sen appealed, mainly on the ground that he was under the circumstances entitled to the benefit of s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Venkatarama* (9).

[798] The judgment of the Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS and O'KINEALY, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The only question which we think it is necessary to decide in this case is whether the assignee can recover the whole of the debt assigned to him, in an action brought by him against the debtor, or whether he is precluded by s. 135 of the Transfer of Property Act from recovering in the action more than the amount which he paid for the debt, notwithstanding that, though the smaller sum is admitted to be due, it has not been paid and is not paid into Court in the action.

If the matter were new there is no doubt that it might be argued with much force that the words, "he against whom it is made is wholly discharged by paying to the buyer the price and incidental expenses of the sale with interest, &c.," must mean that the debtor cannot be compelled to pay any larger sum, but it may equally be argued that as the section takes away a right it must be strictly read, and that it only gives the discharge upon actual payment. As appears in the judgment of the Court below it has been held by two Division Benches of the Court that nothing short of actual payment of the smaller sum, either in or before the action, will entitle the defendant to the benefit of the section, and these decisions are binding on us, unless we are prepared to say that we so entirely disagree with them as to render it necessary for us to refer the question to a Full Bench.

This we cannot say is the state of our minds, and though, as we have before said, we should, if the matter were new, feel that the argument in favour of the defendant's view had considerable force, we are not prepared to say that we do not agree with the conclusions at which two Benches of this Court have arrived. We think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

After the above portion of this judgment had been written the case of Muchiram Barik v. Ishan Chandra Chuckerbutti (10), and others in which precisely the same questions arose as those which arise in this case, was referred to a Full Bench: That Bench has now decided that a mortgage debt is an actionable claim within the meaning of s. 135 of the Act, and agreeing [799] with the decisions of this Court that the defendant is not released by the section of any portion of his liability, unless he pays the amount which the assignee himself paid for the claim. The decision of course concludes this case, and in accordance with it this appeal will be dismissed with costs (11).

CIVIL.

Second Appeal—Civil Procedure Code, 1882, ss. 588, 622—Appeal from order—Order passed in Appeal reversing lower Court's order setting aside a sale in execution of Decree—Sale in execution of Decree—Setting aside sale—Material irregularity—Inadequacy of price—Revisional Power of High Court.

Under the provisions of s. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure no second appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed in appeal by a District Judge on an application by a judgment-debtor to have a sale in execution of a decree set aside on the ground of material irregularity.

A judgment-debtor applied to have a sale in execution of a decree set aside on the ground that the sale proclamation had not been duly published, and that it referred to only 5 bighas instead of some 700, the actual amount, and that in consequence thereof a grossly inadequate price had been obtained for the property. The Munsif found these allegations to be proved and set aside the sale. On appeal the District Judge, while agreeing with the Munsif as to these findings, held that there was no proof that the inadequacy of price was due to irregularities alleged and proved and that such could not be presumed. He accordingly reversed the Munsif's order. The judgment-debtor, having appealed to the High Court against the order of the District Judge and failed in such appeal by reason of no second appeal lying from such order, [800] applied to the High Court under the provisions of s. 622 of the Code to have the order set aside.

Held, that the District Judge having full jurisdiction to determine whether the sale was good or bad, it was impossible to say that, in arriving at the decision he did, he either acted without jurisdiction or illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and that the High Court could not therefore interfere with the order under that section.

THIS was an appeal from an order passed by the District Judge of Bhagulpur, reversing an order of the Munsif of Beguserai, setting aside a sale of certain immovable property held in execution of a decree.

The application was made by the judgment-debtors, and the allegation was that there had been material irregularity in the conduct of the sale, and consequently the price fetched was far below the actual value of the property. The auction-purchaser resisted the application, but the decree-holder did not appear to oppose.

It appeared that the judgment-debtors had a 2-annas odd share in taluk Bullubhpur and Singpur, which contained 1,839 acres of land, but in the sale proclamation the area was put down as 5 bighas; that the sale proclamation was not stuck up at the Collector's Office, nor was the proclamation at the spot properly proved; that the price fetched was only Rs. 375, which was less than the revenue payable for the share, which was Rs. 385 odd.

The Munsif having found these facts proved held that the presumption was that the inadequate price fetched was due to the irregularities in the publication of the sale and consequently ordered the sale to be set aside.

* Appeal from Order No. 150 of 1893, and Civil Rule No. 806 of 1894, against the order of F. W. Badcock, Esq., District Judge of Bhagulpur, dated the 2nd of May 1893, reversing the order of Babu Bepin Bebari Mukerjee, Munsif of Beguserai, dated the 20th of February 1893.

The auction-purchaser appealed to the District Judge, who reversed the Munsif's decision and dismissed the application. The following was the judgment:—

"The judgment-debtors applied to have a sale set aside. The Munsif set aside the sale and the auction-purchaser appeals. The Munsif has found that the judgment-debtors had a 2-annas odd share in taluk Bulbhpur and Singpur which contains 1839 acres of land, but in the sale proclamation this area was put down as 5 bighas; that the sale proclamation was not stuck up at the Collector's Office; that the proclamation at the village was not properly proved, and that the price realized, Rs. 375, was inadequate.

[801] "On the evidence I see no reason to differ from the Munsif's findings of fact; but the appellant's pleader argues that there is no proof that the inadequacy of price was due to the irregularities alleged. He quotes the cases of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1), Tripura Sundari v. Durga Churn Pal (2) and Arunachellam v. Arunachellam (3).

"The effect of these rulings is that there must be proof that the inadequate price was due to the irregularities. In the present case the real area was about 700 bighas, but in the sale proclamation the area is put at 5 bighas. This no doubt raises a strong presumption that the irregularities were the cause of the inadequate price; but apparently from the rulings above quoted this is not sufficient. The applicant called three witnesses who speak to the value of the property; but they do not appear to be men of means, nor do they say what amount they would have bid for the property if they had been aware of the sale. One of them, indeed, Chowdry Roghunath, says that the maliks would have bid more, but in this point the maliks were the best witnesses.

"No one has been called to say what he would have bid, nor is there any proof that there was a scarcity of bidders.

"On the ground that the applicant has failed to prove any connection between the irregularities and the inadequate price I think the decision of the Munsif must be set aside. The appeal is decreed with costs."

The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Babu Saligram Singh, for the appellants.

Mr. J. T. Woodroffe, Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Kali Kishen Sen, for the respondent.

At the hearing of the appeal Mr. Woodroffe took the preliminary objection that, having regard to the provisions of s. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure, no second appeal lay from the Judge's order.

The judgment of the High Court (GHOSE and GORDON, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

[802] We think that the preliminary objection that has been raised by Mr. Woodroffe on behalf of the respondent ought to prevail, that objection being that no second appeal lies to this Court in this case, because the order of the Court of Appeal below is an order falling within s. 588 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

This appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs.

A rule was then applied for and issued on the application of the Advocate-General on behalf of the judgment-debtors calling on the auction-purchaser to show cause why the order of the District Judge confirming the sale should not be set aside, the application being made under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

That rule came on to be heard on the 5th June.

The Advocate-General (Sir Charles Paul) and Babu Saligram Singh, in support of the rule.

Sir Griffith Evans, Mr. T. A. Apcar, Mr. C. Gregory and Babu Kali Kishen Sen, for the auction-purchaser.

Sir Griffith Evans.—This Court has no power to interfere in this case with the decision of the District Judge under s. 622. It can only act under that section in cases where the lower Court has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity. Assuming in this case that the decision of the District Judge is erroneous, all that can be said is that he has come to a wrong decision in the case. He had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question before him, and it cannot be said that, even if he has come to an erroneous legal conclusion, he has exercised his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.

The Privy Council in Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1) have laid down that a Court having jurisdiction cannot, only on the ground that it has arrived at an erroneous conclusion, be said to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally, or with material irregularity; and the same principle is affirmed in Muhammad Yusuf Khan v. Abdul Rahman Khan (2).

The words "material irregularity" do not apply to an erroneous legal conclusion, but only to such matters as an irregularity [803] in the procedure materially affecting the merits of the case—Sew Bux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (3). In this Court it has been held [see Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jadu Ghose Alkushi (4).], that the erroneous application of the wrong statute to a case resulting in a decision that a suit will not lie, constitutes a material irregularity within the section. The provisions of the section are very fully discussed in a case before the Full Bench of the Madras High Court—Manisha Eradi v. Siyali Koya (5)—where it was held that a Court, by erroneously determining a preliminary question, cannot assume jurisdiction which it would not otherwise have, and that the section applied in such a case; but that in a case in which upon the facts found by the Subordinate Court, that Court has jurisdiction according to law, and there is no material irregularity in its procedure affecting the question of jurisdiction, the High Court cannot interfere under the section, though the decision of the lower Court on the merits or on any preliminary question is erroneous in law. See also Bashyam v. Jayaram (6).

The Bombay Court has held that the decision of a question of res judicata though wrong did not warrant the interference of the High Court under s. 622—Amritrav Krishna Deshpande v. Balkrishna Ganesh Amrapurkar (7). In Venkubai v. Lakshman Venkoba Khct (8) Birdwood, J., discusses the case of Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh (1), and points out what he considers to amount to a material irregularity, but I submit his view is erroneous, and even that case does not cover this one.

In this case the most that can be said is that the lower Court has come to an erroneous conclusion on a question of law, even if it be assumed that the decision is erroneous, and as it had full jurisdiction to decide that question it follows, having regard to the decision in the Privy Council cases cited above, that this Court cannot interfere under s. 622, and this rule should therefore be discharged.

The Advocate-General in support of the rule.—I shall contend (1st) that there was want of jurisdiction in the District Judge to [804] confirm the sale; and (2nd) that if he had jurisdiction he acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

As soon as the Judge found, as he practically did, that the sale proclamation had not been duly published, he was bound to refuse to confirm the sale. One cannot confirm that which does not exist. A Judge who records a judgment in ignorance, misconception or contravention of a plain rule of law well established acts "illegally." In this case the Judge, citing certain cases, considered that he could not give effect to a presumption naturally and reasonably arising in the case to the effect that the inadequacy of price was due to the irregularities alleged—amongst others to the mistake in the sale proclamation of 5 bighas instead of about 700 bighas—on the authority of those cases. He considered that according to those cases there must be specific oral evidence connecting the irregularities (the cause) with the inadequacy of price (the effect).

I submit that the cases cited do not lay down the broad proposition indicated, and even if they do those decisions have been explained in a decision of a more recent date not cited by the District Judge, viz., Gur Buksh Lall v. Jawahir Singh (1), in which it was held that the relation of cause and effect between a proved material irregularity and inadequacy of price may either be established by direct evidence or be inferred, where such inference is reasonable, from the nature of the irregularity and the extent of the inadequacy of price. That case clearly applies to this, and I therefore submit that the District Judge acted illegally as above described.

In Jugobundhu Pattuck v. Jadu Ghose Alkushi (2) it was held that a Judge who misconstrued a provision of an Act in such a way as to decline jurisdiction committed an error within the meaning of s. 622, and the High Court (Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.) set aside his judgment; and I contend that there is no real difference between misconstruction of a statutory law and a rule of law well established, and therefore I further submit that the present case is governed by the case last cited.

In Lakshmana v. Najimudin (3) the Madras High Court set aside an erroneous order of a Judge in a case under s. 311 by virtue of the powers conferred by s. 622.

[805] In Dagdusa Tilakchand v. Bhukan Govind Shet (4) the Bombay Court pointed out that in any case where there is a disregard of the law amounting to an excess of jurisdiction, or a perversion of the purposes of the Legislature, the High Court will interfere under its extraordinary jurisdiction where no other remedy is available.

The Privy Council cases cited on the subject of s. 622 laid down that where there is no appeal, s. 622 shall not be used in the same way as an appeal to set aside a decision erroneous in law. The decisions go no further, and do not apply to erroneous decisions within s. 622 with which the High Court can interfere. The cases above cited—Gur Buksh Lall v. Jawahir Singh (1) and Lakshmana v. Najimudin (3) clearly show when the High Court can interfere with erroneous decisions under s. 622.

(1) 20 C. 599.

(3) 9 M. 145.

(2) 15 C. 47.

(4) 9 B. 82.

Finally, I submit that when the District Judge found that there was no actual sale he had no jurisdiction to confirm it. In confirming the sale he acted without jurisdiction. He also acted illegally, having jurisdiction, in deciding that cause and effect could not be presumed under the admitted circumstances such as existed here, namely, clear mistake of 5 bighas sold instead of about 700 bighas and the price being clearly grossly inadequate. Under these circumstances I submit that the judgment should be set aside.

JUDGMENT.

This was a rule calling upon the opposite side, the purchaser at an execution sale, to show cause why the order of the District Judge of Bhagulpur confirming the sale should not be set aside.

The Judge has found, in concurrence with the Munsif, that the judgment-debtor had a 2-annas and odd gundas share in taluk Bullubhpur and Singpur, which contains an area of 1,839 acres of land, but that in the sale proclamation the area was put down as 5 bighas; that the sale proclamation was not stuck up at the Collector's Office; that the proclamation of sale at the village has not been properly proved, and that the price realized at the sale (Rs. 375) is inadequate. But he is of opinion that there is no direct proof [806] (for that is how we understand his judgment) that the inadequacy of price was due to the irregularities; and in this view he has held that the sale should be affirmed, relying, upon among others, the well-known case of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1).

The learned Advocate General in support of the rule has contended that the District Judge has fallen into serious mistake in holding that there must be direct proof of the inadequacy of price being occasioned by the irregularities, and that, as held in the case of Gur Buksh Lall v. Jawahir Singh (2) the relation of cause and effect between a proved material irregularity and inadequacy of price may either be established by direct evidence, or may be inferred from circumstances. He has further contended that the Judge has not considered whether the sale was not altogether bad by reason of the sale notifications having not been published or proved to have been published.

If the case had come up before us in appeal we should have perhaps been prepared to say that the contention of the Advocate-General was correct.

But then the question is, whether it is competent to us to interfere with the order of the District Judge under s. 622 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

What the Judge was called upon to determine on the appeal before him was, whether the sale was a good or bad sale. He has held the sale to be good. He had full jurisdiction to determine this question, one way or the other; and we are unable to say that, in the decision he has arrived at, he has in any way acted without jurisdiction, or, in the exercise of his jurisdiction, he has acted illegally. All that can possibly be said is, that the Judge has committed errors in law, but we cannot say that in that respect he has acted illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

[807] APPELLATE CIVIL.

Before Mr. Justice Ameer Ali and Mr. Justice Rampini.

RAJESHWAR PERSHAD SINGH (Plaintiff) v. BURTA KOER
(Defendant).^{*} [13th April, 1894.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 158—Application for enhancement of rent when no settlement proceedings are in operation.

The Court in dealing with an application under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act cannot pass a decree for enhancement of the rent. Where therefore a landlord seeks to enhancement of the rent of his tenant when no settlement proceedings are going on he must institute a suit for the purpose, and cannot do so by means of an application under s. 158.

[F., 6 C.W.N. 592 (593).]

THIS was an application by Rajeshwar Pershad Singh and others, proprietors of mouza Yakubpore, under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, for the determination of the incidents of the tenancy of one of his tenants, Burta Koer, in respect of lands held by her in that mouza.

The Subordinate Judge, after a commission had been issued to ascertain the situation, quantity and boundaries of the land held by Burta Koer, found that there was in her occupation under the applicants 12 bighas 16 cottahs 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ dhurs which was in excess of the quantity of land shown by the jamabandi by 1 bigha 6 cottahs 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ dhurs. As to the rent payable by her he observed:—

"The jama payable by Burta Koer for 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ bighas of land was Rs. 14-4-9. Hence the rent payable by her for 12 bighas 16 cottahs 4 $\frac{3}{4}$ dhurs of land would be Rs. 15-14-9, and this I find to be the rent payable by Burta at the time of the application;" and a decree was made in accordance with that decision.

On appeal the Judge agreed with the lower Court as to the amount of land held by Burta Koer. He said "as to the rent payable for the holding the usual attempt was made to assess rent at rates corresponding to those paid for adjacent lands of similar quality. The Subordinate Judge, however, found the rent actually paid, and assessed rent on the excess lands at the existing rate. On this part of the case also I agree with his decision. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed with costs."

[808] From this decision the landlord appealed mainly on the ground that the Judge was wrong in holding that the rent payable at the time of the application meant the rent actually paid, and that he should have found what was the rent which the tenant was liable to pay at the time of the application, that is, he should have assessed rent at rates paid for adjacent lands of similar quality, or at any rate he should have assessed the rent of the excess lands at rates paid for similar lands in places adjacent.

^{*} Appeal from Appellate Decree, No. 1303 of 1893, against the decree of J. Kelleher, Esq., District Judge of Sarun, dated 3rd of April 1893, affirming the decree of Babu Nilmoney Dass, Subordinate Judge of that district, dated the 11th of December 1891.

Babu Jadub Chandra Seal, for the appellant.

Babu Saligram Singh, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court (AMEER ALI and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is a case under s. 158 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaintiffs are the landlords, and they apply for the determination of the incidents of the defendant's tenancy.

The only point raised before us in this appeal is that the lower Courts, in determining the rent payable by the defendant, have not fixed that rent in accordance with the rates paid for similar lands in the vicinity, but have calculated it at the rates hitherto paid by the defendant. In short, the objection is that the Courts below have not enhanced the defendant's rent. We, however, think the lower Courts are right. Section 158(d) lays down that a Court dealing with an application under s. 158 is to determine the rent payable by the tenant "at the time of the application." It, therefore, could not have been intended that in a case under this section the Court should pass a decree for enhancement which can ordinarily only take effect from the beginning of the agricultural year, next following, or from that of the year next but one following, the year in which the decree was passed.

It has been said that when no settlement proceedings are going on, an application under s. 158 takes the place of an application under s. 104 (2), in the course of which a Settlement Officer has power to enhance or reduce a tenant's rent. This is quite true, but when settlement proceedings are going on, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is in abeyance (see s. 111 a), so that no enhancement suit can then be instituted, and hence it is that the Settlement Officer is empowered to alter a tenant's rent. But an application under s. 158 does not oust the jurisdiction [809] of the Civil Court in respect of the alteration of a tenant's rent. It, therefore, seems to us that if a landlord seeks to enhance his tenant's rent when no settlement proceedings are going on, he must institute a suit for the purpose, and cannot do so by means of an application under s. 158.

We accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

premises 22 Strand Road, which was subject to certain trusts created by a deed, dated 2nd February 1858, executed by the father of the judgment-debtors, who with one M. were trustees of the deed. At the time of the attachment a suit No. 448 of 1883 was pending, in which the judgment-debtors as plaintiffs sought to have it declared what were the valid trusts under the deed, and that, subject to such trusts, they were absolutely entitled to the premises 22 Strand Road and the other properties; in that suit on 26th March 1888 a decree was made declaring the valid trusts and charging the premises 22 Strand Road, with the payment of certain specific sums. In 1891, the judgment-debtors brought a suit No. 441 of 1891 to have the premises 22 Strand Road sold freed from the trusts, to provide for the trusts by setting apart a sufficient sum out of the purchase-money, and to have the balance divided between the judgment-debtors: and by the decree in that suit, dated 2nd September 1892, the trustees of the deed were authorized to sell the premises 22 Strand Road, and were directed out of the proceeds of sale to set aside Rs. 45,000 to provide for the trusts, next to pay the costs therein directed, and then to apply the balance for the purposes in the plaint mentioned. In pursuance of this authority the trustees on 25th February 1893 entered into an agreement with one J. L. for sale to him of the premises 22 Strand Road for Rs. 1,43,000. On 8th August 1893 a notice was issued at the instance of P. calling on the judgment-debtors to [810] show cause why the premises 22 Strand Road, should not be sold in execution under her attachment. On 29th August 1893 the trustees of the deed of 2nd February 1858 gave notice to P. of an application to be made in the suits Nos. 369 of 1856 and 441 of 1891 for the removal of her attachment, or in the alternative for an order that the agreement for sale entered into by the trustees with J. L. be carried out; that the proceeds of sale be applied to certain purposes specified in the notice, as having priority over the claim of P.; that the balance be paid to the credit of suit No. 369, "as subject to the said attachment," and that the premises 22 Strand Road be thereupon released from attachment. These applications were heard together, and on the 14th September 1893 a consent order was made by which it was ordered that the trustees be at liberty to carry out the agreement for sale with J. L.; that the sale proceeds be paid to W., a member of the firm of the attorneys for P., who out of such proceeds was to pay Rs. 45,000 to the trustees, and make other payments directed by the order, and pay the balance into Court to the credit of suits Nos. 369 of 1886 and 441 of 1891, "the said P. retaining her lien under her attachment upon the said balance in the same way as the same then subsisted upon the said property." The property was sold by the trustees in accordance with this order, and the purchase-money was paid to W., who after making the payments directed paid the balance into Court. Whilst in the hands of W. the balance was attached by other creditors who had obtained decrees against the judgment-debtors, and it was paid into Court with notice of these attachments; Held, on an application by P. to have the money paid out to her in part satisfaction of her decree, that it could not be treated as "assets realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" within the meaning of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sale of the property under the order of 14th September 1893 was not a sale in execution, but a sale in pursuance of a private agreement entered into by the trustees under a liberty reserved to them by the Court, and the fact that the Court sanctioned it made no difference in this respect. It did not purport to be a sale of any right, title or interest of the judgment-debtors or of any property belonging to them.

To constitute a "realization" within the meaning of s. 295 there must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code. If the money paid into Court had exceeded the amount due to B in respect of her lien, the amount of such excess might perhaps have been treated as a "realization in execution" within the meaning of s. 295, but the balance in W's hands was less than the amount due to P., and was entirely absorbed by the lien in her favour. There was therefore no surplus on which the attachments could operate.

Watkins & Co. for costs, for which they claimed a lien on the title-deeds of the premises 22 Strand Road), and that the balance should be paid into Court to the credit of suit No. 369 as subject to the attachment in that suit, and that the said premises should be released from the attachment; and that the plaintiff in suit No. 369 should pay the costs of and incidental to the application; that the application by the plaintiff in suit No. 369 and that of the judgment-debtors came on for hearing on 14th September, when by consent of all the parties an order was made in suit No. 369, whereby it was ordered that the trustees of the deed of trust of 2nd February 1858 should be at liberty to carry out the contract for sale of the premises 22 Strand Road, to Joygobind Law, the plaintiff releasing her claim to those premises under the attachment for the purpose only of permitting the sale, the sale-proceeds to be paid in the first instance to Mr. Watkins who should thereout pay all the costs of and incidental to the sale, the sum of Rs. 45,000 to the trustees of the deed of the 2nd February 1858 to be held by them for the purposes of the trusts as declared by the order of 2nd September 1892, and certain other payments, and pay the balance of the sale proceeds into Court to the credit of the suits Nos. 369 of 1886 and 441 of 1891, "the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi retaining her lien under her attachment upon the said balance in the same way as it then subsisted on the attached property;" the lien if any of Messrs. Watkins & Co. on the title deeds of the property to attach to the balance to be paid into Court, costs to be reserved until further order of Court, and the order to be without [813] prejudice to the right of the parties; that the sale of the premises 22 Strand Road was carried out under the above order, and from an account furnished by Mr. Watkins to the plaintiff in suit No. 369 it appeared that after paying the sums as directed by the said order, and retaining a sum of Rs. 2,000 on account of Messrs. Watkins & Co.'s costs subject to settlement, the balance was paid into Court, and there was in Court the sum of Rs. 75,405-14-8 to the credit of the two suits; and that after the realization of the proceeds of sale by Mr. Watkins, on the 23rd November 1893, attachments were issued in two other suits brought by one Behary Lall and one Balmokund Singonya, respectively, against the judgment-debtors, viz., suits Nos. 51 and 52 of 1893 against the proceeds of sale in the hands of Mr. Watkins, and the money was paid into Court with notice of these attachments.

The application was that the said sum of Rs. 75,405-14-8, and any balance that might remain in the hands of Mr. Watkins after adjustment of his costs, might be paid to the plaintiff in suit No. 369 of 1886 in part satisfaction of her decree in that suit; or if the Court should be of opinion that the plaintiff was not alone entitled to the said money, then for an order for rateable distribution under s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure to those entitled to share in it.

suits under an order, dated the 14th September 1893. The circumstances under which this fund was paid into Court are as follows :—

The plaintiff Prosonnomoyi obtained a decree in the first suit, dated 6th December 1886, for the sum of Rs. 2,14,728 with interest and costs against Sreenauth Roy, Sumbhoonauth Roy and Gopinauth Roy.

In February 1887 the plaintiff, in execution of the decree, attached various properties, including the premises No. 22 Strand Road, which were subject to certain trusts created by an Indenture, dated 2nd February 1858, executed by the father of the judgment-debtors. At that time a suit No. 448 of 1883 was pending, wherein the judgment-debtors as plaintiffs sought for a declaration of what were the valid trusts under the Indenture of Trust, and that, subject to such trusts, the plaintiffs were absolutely entitled to the premises No. 22 Strand Road, and the other properties. On the 26th March 1888 a decree was made in that suit declaring what were the valid trusts, and charging the premises No. 22 Strand Road with the payment of certain specific sums.

In 1891, the second of the abovementioned suits was instituted by the judgment-debtors, the object of which was to have the premises No. 22 Strand Road sold freed from the trusts, to provide for the trusts by setting apart a sufficient sum out of the purchase-money, and then to have the balance divided equally amongst the judgment-debtors.

By the order of the 2nd September 1892 made in that suit the trustees of the Indenture of Settlement were authorized to sell the premises No. 22 Strand Road, and were directed out of the proceeds to set apart Rs. 45,000 to provide for the trusts; next to pay the costs therein directed, and then to apply the balance "for the purposes in the plaint mentioned." In pursuance of this authority the trustees, being the judgment-debtors and one Muddoosoodun Dutt, on the 25th February 1893, entered into an agreement with one Joygobind Law for sale to him of the premises No. 22 Strand Road for the sum of Rs. 1,43,000.

[815] On the 8th of August 1893 a notice was issued at the instance of the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi calling upon the judgment-debtors to show cause why the premises 22 Strand Road should not be sold in execution of her attachment. On the 29th of August 1893 the trustees gave notice to the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi of an application to be made in both the abovementioned suits for the removal of her attachment, or in the alternative for an order that the agreement for sale entered into by the trustees be carried out, and that the sale proceeds be applied for the purposes in the notice specified, as having priority over the claim of the judgment-creditor Prosonnomoyi Dassi, that the balance be paid to the credit of the first mentioned suit, as subject to the said attachment, and that the property be thereupon released from attachment. Both applications were heard together, and on the 14th September 1893 an order was made with the consent of all the parties, whereby it was, amongst other things, ordered that the trustees be at liberty to carry out the agreement for sale with Joygobind Law, the plaintiff agreeing to release her claim to the property for the purposes of the sale only; that the sale proceeds be paid to Mr. N. S. Watkins; that he do thereout pay the sum of Rs. 45,000 to the trustees and make the other payments directed by the order and then pay into Court the balance to the credit of both the abovementioned suits, "the said Prosonnomoyi Dassi retaining her lien under her attachment upon the said balance in the same way as the same then subsisted upon the said property." There was also a direction that the lien, if any, of Messrs. Watkins & Co., on the title deeds of the premises should attach to the balance. By this order the attachment was removed, but in place thereof a lien was created in favour of the judgment-creditor which was to attach to the balance of the proceeds of sale. The property was sold by the trustees free from the attachment, and the purchase-money was paid to Mr. Watkins, who made certain payments as directed by the order, and after retaining a sum for costs in respect of which his firm claimed a lien on the title deeds, paid the balance into Court. Messrs. Watkins & Co. now claim a further sum in satisfaction of their lien, and there is also a claim by the trustees in respect of certain of the payments directed by the order, which, it is alleged, have not yet been satisfied.

[816] It appears that the balance, while in the hands of Mr. Watkins, was attached by two other judgment-creditors, being the plaintiffs in the suits No. 52 of 1893 and No. 51 of 1893 who had obtained decrees against the defendants Sreenauth Roy, Shumbhoonauth Roy, and Gopinauth Roy, and that it was paid into Court to the credit of both the abovementioned suits with notice of these attachments.

The plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi now asks to have the balance (after satisfaction of the claims of the trustees and of Messrs. Watkins & Co.) paid out to her in priority to the attaching creditors, who, on the other hand, claim to share rateably in the fund under the provisions of s. 295 of the Code.

At the hearing of the application a third judgment-creditor appeared and claimed to share in the distribution of the fund.

The main question is whether under the circumstances this fund can be treated as "assets realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" within the meaning of s. 295. Can it be said, in the first place, that the sale of the property under the order of the 14th September was a sale in execution?

If the property had been sold under the proviso to s. 295, it would have been, doubtless, a sale in execution, but at the same time a sale from the benefit of which the attaching creditors would have been excluded. For the proviso after fixing the order of payment of the prior charges restricts the distribution of the balance to the "holders of decrees for money against the judgment-debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the said property, applied to the Court which made the decree ordering the sale for execution of such decrees and have not obtained satisfaction thereof."

The facts show that the sale of this property did not take place under the proviso, and that it was a sale, not in execution of any decree or order, but in pursuance of a private agreement entered into by the trustees with the purchaser under a liberty reserved to them by the Court. The sale no doubt was further sanctioned by the Court as part of the arrangement embodied in the consent order of the 14th September, under which Prosonnomoyi agreed to remove her attachment, and thus allow the sale to be carried out, on the condition that instead of the attachment she should have a [817] lien on the purchase-money. But in no sense can it be suggested that the sale was in execution of this order.

The case of Purshotam Das v. Mahanunt Surajbharti (1) decides that s. 295 must be read as if the words "from the property of the judgment-debtor" were inserted after the word "realized." Here the sale did not purport to be a sale of any right, title or interest of the judgment-debtors or of any property belonging to them. It was a sale by the trustees of property which was vested in them as trustees. Moreover, reading the case just cited with the case of Sewbux Bogla v. Shib Chunder Sen (1) the rule appears to be that to constitute a realization within the meaning of s. 295, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code. It cannot, I think, be said that the money paid to Mr. Watkins under the order of the 14th September 1893 was realized in any of the methods provided by the Code for realizing property in execution of a decree.

When the fund was attached it was held by Mr. Watkins subject to a prior lien created by an order of Court in favour of the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi, which lien was binding on the judgment-debtors and those claiming under them. When paid into Court this fund was still subject to that lien. If the money paid into Court had exceeded the amount due to the plaintiff in respect of which the lien was created in her favour, the amount of such excess having been paid into Court with notice of the attachment might perhaps have been treated as a realization in execution within the meaning of s. 295. For the excess in that case would have been money belonging to the judgment-debtors attached while in the hands of a third party and subsequently paid into Court under an order of the Court. Payment into Court under such circumstances forms a well recognized method of realization in execution under the Code. But the balance in Mr. Watkins' hands was very far below the amount due to the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi and was entirely absorbed by the lien in her favour. There was therefore no surplus upon which the attachments could operate.

[818] In my opinion this is not a case of distribution of assets under s. 295. The rights of the judgment-creditors claiming to share in this fund must therefore be postponed to the rights of the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi under the lien declared in her favour by the order of the 14th September 1893.

There being no contest as between the plaintiff Prosonnomoyi Dassi and the trustees and Messrs. Watkins & Co., there must be an order for payment of the balance to her after satisfaction of the claims of the trustees and of Messrs. Watkins & Co. The costs of the parties sharing in the fund may be added to their claims.

AJUDHIA PERSHAD (Judgment-debtor) v. BALDEO SINGH
(Decree-holder).^{*} [21st May, 1894.]

21 C. 818.

Civil Procedure Code, 1882, s. 235—Order absolute for sale, Application for—Execution of decree—Verification of application—Limitation—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 89.

An application for an order absolute for sale of mortgaged property under the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is not an application for execution of a decree and need not therefore be in the form prescribed by s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

A decree was passed in a mortgage suit on the 13th July 1887 by consent, which directed that the amount due was to be paid in ten annual instalments during the years 1295—1304 (1888—1897) in the month of Falgoon (February) each year, and that on default of three successive instalments the whole amount was to become at once due and payable. The mortgagor having defaulted in payment of the instalments due in the years 1297, 1298, and 1299 (1890, 1891, 1892) the mortgagee on the 18th February 1893 presented an application to the Court under s. 89 of the Transfer [819] of Property Act for an order absolute for sale. That application was not verified by the mortgagee, and the mortgagor objected that, not being so verified as required by s. 235 of the Code, it could not be granted. On the 9th May 1893 the mortgagee applied for and obtained leave to verify the application which he did on that day. It was urged on behalf of the mortgagor that the application must be treated as made on the 9th May, and therefore not within three years of the date on which the 1297 instalment became due (7th March 1890), and that it was therefore barred by limitation.

Held, that the application did not require to be in the form provided by s. 235, and consequently the non-verification did not affect it, and that it was not barred by limitation.

THE facts of this case were as follows:—

The respondent Baldeo Singh, on the 13th July 1887, obtained a decree against several defendants in a suit instituted by him against them on a mortgage. There were three sets of defendants the judgment-debtors in this proceeding, Ajudhia Pershad being one out of the second set. The decree was made by consent being the result of a compromise under which it was agreed that the decree should be for Rs. 12,000 without interest and costs, and that each set of defendants should be liable for a third of that amount, and that their respective shares in the mortgaged property should remain charged till the decree was satisfied. It was provided in the decree that the amount due should be paid in ten annual instalments during the years 1295 to 1304 (1888—1897) in the month of Falgoon (February) in each year, and that on default being made in the payment of three successive instalments the whole amount outstanding was to become due and payable to the plaintiff, and be realized by the sale of the respective shares of the defendants in the mortgaged property.

^{*} Appeal from Order No. 152 of 1893, against the order of Babu Madhab Chander Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 10th of May 1893.

On the 18th February 1893 the plaintiff Baldeo Singh applied to the Subordinate Judge for an order absolute for the sale of the mortgaged property against all the defendants, alleging that the three instalments for the years 1297, 1298, and 1299 (1890, 1891, 1892) due under the decree had not been paid.

Ajudhia Pershad alone opposed the application and filed several petitions of objections against the order being made. Amongst other grounds he urged that the decree being separate against each set of defendants one application against them all jointly would not lie; that the application for sale not being verified by [820] the decree-holder no order could be passed; and that there had been default in the payment of the first three instalments, viz., those for the years 1295 to 1297 (1888 to 1890), and that consequently the application was barred by limitation.

In answer to the second objection the plaintiff decree-holder on the 6th May 1893 filed a petition asking to be allowed to verify his petition. The matter appeared to have come on for hearing on the 9th May, and on that date the Subordinate Judge allowed the petition to be verified, which was immediately done. The objection having been heard judgment was reserved till the following day. On the 10th May the judgment-debtor Ajudhia Pershad filed a further petition of objection, contending that the application must be treated as made on the 9th May, the date of its being verified, and that it was therefore barred by limitation, being made more than three years after the accrual of the right on the 1st Cheyt 1297 (8th March 1890).

The Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 10th of May, and disposed of the three objections above referred to in the following manner:—

“The first point was not pressed during the hearing of the application, but as the objection was taken in the written objections filed, I think it proper to notice it here. This is not an application for executions. Consequently under the provisions of s. 647, the provisions of s. 34 of the Code of Civil Procedure are applicable to this case. This being virtually an objection on the ground of misjoinder of parties, it ought to have been taken at the earliest opportunity before the first hearing of the case, for which the 20th March was fixed. The judgment-debtor appeared on that day, but did not object to the petition on that ground; he only asked for time. The Court allowed him seven days' time, but even then he did not take this objection. I think, therefore, that such an objection cannot be entertained now. But supposing it can be raised now, still it does not seem to me that the objection is valid. The decree is based on the same compromise; the mortgaged property is the same, although each has a separate share. This being merely an application for an order absolute for sale, the irregularity, if any, cannot be fatal.

“The second objection is reasonable. Such application must be verified, but the applicant neglected to verify it. He has however applied for permission to verify when that defect was pointed out at the hearing by the pleader for the judgment-debtor. The latter contends that such an amendment cannot be allowed at this stage, because under the ruling in Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (1) this application must be deemed as an application for [821] execution, and it has been held in Asgar Ali v. Troilokya Nath Ghose (2) that no such amendment can be allowed when the petition has been registered. But there is nothing in the first ruling to show that this petition can be regarded as a petition for execution of a decree; consequently s. 245 of the Code of Civil Procedure, on which the second decree is based, does not govern this case. It is not an application for execution of a decree, and, what is more, it has not been entered in any register, as none has been prescribed for it. Under s. 647 of the Code of Civil Procedure, s. 53 is applicable with respect to this petition, and as such it can be amended now. I have therefore allowed it to be verified now. The objection therefore is no longer tenable.

"Third: It was also contended that there was default in the first three instalments; consequently petitioner's cause of action for such an application accrued when default was made with respect to the instalments of 1297. Limitation began to run from that time. This may be true, but calculated from that time this petition was presented within three years. Therefore plaintiff's right to execute the decree was not barred on the 20th February, when this petition was filed. If it be held that limitation began to run from the date of the kist of 1297, that is Falgun 1297, and no steps in aid of execution be existing to save the case from limitation, then possibly it may be so barred, although I am not at all sure of it. But that circumstance cannot be taken into consideration now. Here all I have to see is, when this application was filed had the decree-holder any subsisting right to realize the decretal amount, or was it barred by limitation. I have shown it was not so barred. This objection therefore also falls to the ground.

"In the view I take of the case it is unnecessary to enquire whether there was default only in 1297, 1298 and 1299.

"Just before delivery of judgment, the judgment-debtor has filed a fourth petition of objection. Objection by such instalments is extremely irregular, and is inconvenient to all concerned. It is now urged that as the petition for the order absolute for sale was verified only yesterday, it should be considered that the petition in question was filed yesterday, and the plaintiff's right to realize the debt is consequently barred by limitation; but the date of a petition or plaint is not the date when it is amended but when it is presented. This objection is not therefore more reasonable than the others.

"It is ordered therefore that the objections be disallowed and the order for sale be made absolute."

The judgment-debtor Ajudhia Pershad appealed to the High Court.

Dr. Trailakya Nath Mitter and Babu Makhan Lal, for the appellant.

Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Ragunandun Pershad, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

The parties to this proceeding stand to each other in the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee. The mortgagors are three in number; they had borrowed from the mortgagee a considerable sum of money; and a suit was brought upon the mortgage, and, in the course of the suit, a compromise was entered into between the parties. Under this compromise, each of the mortgagors agreed to pay to the mortgagee the sum of Rs. 4,000 by certain instalments; and it was provided that as security for the sum payable by each mortgagor, a third share of the properties already mortgaged should continue to be in mortgage, and that in the event of any of the mortgagors committing default in three consecutive instalments, the mortgagee should be entitled to realise the money payable by such mortgagor by sale of his share of the properties mortgaged. A decree was accordingly made in those terms. Subsequently the mortgagee, by reason of the default committed by the mortgagors in paying the instalments on account of the years 1297, 1298 and 1299, applied for the sale of the mortgaged properties. It appears that at the time when this application was presented, it bore no verification by the mortgagee, but subsequently, upon an order made by the Court, the defect, if there was any, was rectified.

The mortgagors raised several objections to the application of the mortgagee being granted. They contended that this being an application for execution of the decree, it could not be proceeded with, inasmuch as it did not contain, at the time of presentation, the verification of the mortgagee, that being one of the requirements of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that the application was barred by limitation; and that because subsequent to the default complained of by the mortgagee, i.e., as regards the instalments for 1297, 1298 and 1299 he received from them (the mortgagors) the instalment for the year 1296, he thereby waived the default on account of those years.

As regards this last objection, it is sufficient to say that the amount received by the mortgagee after this default was not in respect of any one of the three years with which we are now concerned. What was received by the mortgagee was the amount payable on account of a year antecedent to the three years in respect [823] of which default has now occurred, and for which, in accordance with the express stipulations contained in the decree, the mortgagee is entitled to apply for realization of the amount due to him by sale of the mortgaged properties.

The question of limitation raised by the mortgagors is intimately connected with the objection that the application presented on behalf of the mortgagee, having not been duly verified at the time it was presented, it could not be regarded as an application for execution within the meaning of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned vakil in support of his argument relied upon a case in the Allahabad High Court, Oudh Behari Lal v. Nageshar Lal (1), where it seems to have been held that an application for an order absolute for sale under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act is a proceeding in execution and subject to the rules of procedure governing such matters. Now, on referring to the Transfer of Property Act itself, it will be found that when a mortgagee applies either for foreclosure of a mortgage, or for sale of the mortgaged premises, the Court makes a preliminary decree—a decree nisi so to say—ordering that the mortgagors should be at liberty to pay to the mortgagee the amount of money due to him within a certain time fixed, and that in the event of the mortgagor not satisfying the claim of the mortgagee within the time limited, the property should be foreclosed, or, in the case of an application for sale of the mortgaged premises, the mortgaged property or a sufficient part thereof should be sold.

Then we find in s. 89 of the Act that, in the event of the mortgagor not paying to the mortgagee the amount of money mentioned in the preliminary decree, and upon an application being made by the mortgagee, an order absolute for sale should be made. Therefore when, after a preliminary decree made by the Court, the mortgagee makes an application for an order absolute (or for a decree absolute, for that would perhaps be a more appropriate expression), the application is not an application for execution of the decree, because, until the decree absolute is made under s. 89, there is in fact no decree capable of execution. A question somewhat akin to that which we have to determine [824] was considered by this Court in Poresh Nath Mojumdar v. Ramjodu Mojumdar (1). The question that was raised in that case was whether, until the order absolute is made under s. 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagor could not redeem the mortgage; and with reference to this question the learned Judges expressed themselves as follows: "Apart however from the English cases, it is quite clear that the Legislature in enacting s. 87 intended to give some effect to it, but if the respondent's contention were right, this section would be of no effect, and s. 86 plus non-payment of the money would give a right of possession. Section 87 of the Transfer of Property Act, provides that if the payment be not made within the time fixed in the decree 'the plaintiff may apply to the Court for an order that the defendant, and all persons claiming through or under him, be debarred absolutely of all right to redeem the mortgaged property.' That means without such an order the defendant would not be debarred of all right to redeem the mortgaged property. The fact that the Legislature allowed the plaintiff to apply for such an order shows that without that order the right to redeem would not be taken away. Section 87 goes on to say: 'And the Court shall then pass such order, and may, if necessary, deliver possession of the property to the plaintiff.' If the property be not redeemed the Court would have to pass an order absolute. It seems quite clear to us that the fact of the Legislature having made this provision requiring an order absolute to be made, makes the earlier order simply an order nisi, and the mortgagor can at any time, until the order absolute is made, redeem his property."

We may say we entirely concur in the view thus expressed. It seems to us that the application that was presented by the mortgagee for sale of the mortgaged property, being an application within the meaning of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, it could be given effect to, even if it was not in compliance with the terms of s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We have already said that the question of limitation that was raised in the Court below by the appellant depended upon the validity of the objection that the application of the mortgagee should have been verified. If this objection could not be sustained, [825] it was admitted by the learned vakil for the appellant that the plea of limitation also could not succeed.

On these grounds we are of opinion that this appeal should fail, and we accordingly dismiss it with costs.

Appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 173—Order setting aside sale in execution of decree for rent.

No appeal lies from an order setting aside a sale under s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[F., 13 C.L.J. 257 (261) = 15 C.W.N. 512 (514) = 7 Ind. Cas. 769 ; Appr., 3 C.W.N. 184 ; Rel., 19 C.L.J. 81 = 20 Ind. Cas. 191.]

THIS was an application under s. 173, sub-s. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to set aside an execution sale on the ground that the purchase had been made by the judgment-debtor in the name of Roghu Singh. The applicant Misri Singh claimed to be a co-sharer with the judgment-debtor Khiali Singh, though he was not sued for the rent in execution of the decree, for arrears of which the sale took place.

The Munsif, after holding that the application was not barred by limitation, found on the merits that Khiali, the judgment-debtor, had himself purchased the property in order to deprive Misri Singh, the applicant (who was found to be a relative of the debtor), of it. The Munsif, therefore, ordered that the sale be set aside.

The auction-purchaser Roghu Singh appealed to the Judge, who held that no appeal lay from the order, and this is the only question material to this report. As to this the Judge said :—

"In this case I am asked to hear an appeal from an order of the Court below setting aside a sale under s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is admitted on both sides that such an order is not appealable under s. 588 of the Civil Procedure Code ; but it is contended for the appellants that not being provided for in s. 588 it must be taken to be a 'decree.' I cannot agree to this proposition. The word 'decree' and the word 'order' are both defined in the Civil Procedure Code ; and if all orders which are not included in s. 588 are decrees, then there is no occasion for any definition and no occasion for s. 588 being enacted at all. Section 588 says that [826] the orders mentioned therein are the only orders appealable under the Code. There must therefore be other orders contemplated by the definition. An order setting aside a sale cannot in my opinion be a decree, as it is not a formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up ; it is an order in a proceeding incidental and subsidiary to a decree. It certainly does not make the receiver of the relief a decree-holder as defined in the Code. When the definition of a decree says that an order specified in s. 588 is not within the definition, it must be held that the same class of orders under other Acts are not decrees, and therefore not appealable unless expressly made so by law, for s. 588 itself excludes such orders from the ordinary appellate jurisdiction in decrees, and makes them miscellaneous matters. The setting aside of a sale is not contemplated in s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, so that I must hold that I have no jurisdiction to entertain this appeal. There is no ruling on the subject so far as the Court and the pleaders engaged have been able to discover, and it is with a view to getting the question authoritatively decided that the appellant has preferred to take my order on appeal rather than to withdraw the appeal and petition the High Court against the Munsif's decision."

The appeal was, therefore, dismissed with costs; and Roghu Singh appealed to the High Court on the ground that the Judge was in error in holding that the order under s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not appealable.

Dr. Trailakya Nath Mitter and Babu Degumber Chatterjee, for the appellant.

Babu Rajendro Nath Bose and Babu Amarendra Nath Chatterjee, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

We think that the learned District Judge was right in holding that no appeal lay against an order setting aside a sale under s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The order in question could not be regarded as a "decree" as defined by the Code of Civil Procedure, nor could it fall within s. 244 of that Code, because the appellant was an outsider, and not a party to the suit in which the decree was made. The Bengal Tenancy Act itself does not provide for an appeal against an order like this, and we are not aware of any provision in the Civil Procedure Code allowing an appeal against such an order.

That being so, this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

THE facts of this case were as follows :—

In the village of Timakati was an old-established hat, known as the Kumarkhalli hat. Close to it a new hat, the Goalkati hat, was recently established. Both these hats were held on the same day. Since the establishment of the new hat, strained relations had existed between the two parties. The accused belonged to the party of the owner of the old hat. As the complainant was going to the new hat the accused and several others seized him. He cried out and a number of the new hat people came up to the rescue: a free fight then ensued between the two parties, in the course of which several persons were injured.

The accused were convicted of the offence of rioting by the [828] Deputy Magistrate of Barisal, the material portion of whose judgment was as follows:—

"The defendants have been charged with having committed rioting near a hat which is known as Goalkati hat; there was a counter case to this; the counter case has also been tried by me; the complainant in the counter case was the defendant Rohimuddi Howladar. The complainant in this case, viz., Asman Ali Mira, was a defendant in the counter case; there is no doubt as to the fact that a riot took place on the 27th March. The cause of the rioting was the existence of two rival hats, viz., Kumarkhalli hat and Goalkati hat at a short distance from each other, on two sides of a khal; the Kumarkhalli hat is an old hat, whereas the Goalkati hat appears to have been established a few months ago. Both hats sit on the same days, viz., Saturdays and Tuesdays. The defendants belong to a party of Matilal Banerjee, the owner of the greater portion of the Kumarkhalli hat. The complainant is backed by Asmatoli Khan; according to the prosecution the new hat (i.e., Goalkati hat) was established by the Goalkati people, as one of the Goalkati people was ill-treated by the Kumarkhalli people at the Kumarkhalli hat. Whatever may be the real circumstances which led to the establishment of the new hat, this is certain that strained relations have existed between the two parties owing to the existence of the two hats. The accused party is clearly inimical to the interests of the new hat. The defendants are men of Matilal Banerjee; they appear to have formed a combination against Asmatoli Khan, who back the Goalkati people. The promoters of the new hat are no doubt men of Asmatoli. The circumstances stated above show clearly that the accused party, including the defendants who are men of Matilal, are inimical to the new hat, while the complainant party who are backed by Asmatoli are inimical to the interests of the old hat.

"Of the witnesses for the prosecution Faizaddi (who was a defendant in the counter case) was wounded in the riot, but the wound was slight. The defendants, viz., Golam Ali, Naimoudi, Basiraddi and Rohimuddi Howladar, bear injuries. The witnesses for the prosecution said that the defendants and several others, who are men of Matilal, went to the west side of the khal over an iron bridge to prevent the complainant from going to the new hat. The new hat is on the west side of the khal and the old hat (i.e., Kumarkhalli hat) is on the east side of the khal.

CRIMINAL REVISION.

The prosecution says that when the complainant was seized by the accused party he cried out, and a number of the new hat people came up, and when the latter came up the accused party let go the complainant, but attacked those who came up from the new hat, and that the attack consisted in pelting bricks at the men of the complainant party.

"It is admitted by the complainants' witnesses that the men of the complainants' party also pelted bricks at the accused party.

There is no doubt whatever that there was a fight between the two parties. The accused party showed a determination to fight, and so did the complainant party. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector shows that he saw [829] bricks on the road on both sides of the bridge. The witnesses for the prosecution stated before the police officer that the accused party were on the east side of the bridge, and the complainant party were on the west side of the bridge. The reason for changing the story a little by adding that the accused party went to the west side of the bridge is apparent, the men of the complainant were accused in the counter case and so it was natural for them to attempt to throw all the blame on the accused party. In a case where both parties are to blame it is but natural that each party should try to throw as much blame as possible on the other party.

The fact that bricks were found on both sides of the bridge shows that the two parties were on opposite sides of the bridge when they pelted bricks at each other; there was undoubtedly a determination to fight on the part of each party: the fight took place, as appears from the Sub-Inspector's evidence, at the iron bridge, which is not far from the two hats; the two parties must have advanced as far as the iron bridge when the fight began; the circumstances disclosed in the evidence do not support the theory that any of the accused party had a right of private defence. The defence is that the complainant party were coming over the bridge towards the old hat, but I do not believe that the complainant party came to the east side of the bridge, for the first information lodged by the defendant Rohimuddi Howladar in the counter case clearly shows that the complainant party did not go to the east side of the bridge, and thus it is clear that the accused party had no right of private defence.

"The evidence on the record shows beyond doubt that there was a free fight between the two parties, who pelted bricks and brick-bats at each other; besides the witnesses who were defendants in the counter case, other witnesses, viz., Kali Charn Kumar, Sonamddi, Govindo Chand Kundo, Reazaddi and Uddabkha were examined by the prosecution.

"Of the five defendants there is no doubt whatever as to the guilt of Basiraddi, Rohimuddi Howladar, Naimoudi and Gulam Ali. The fact that they all bear injuries which were admittedly received by them in the riot shows that they took part in the fight. They appear to have been hurt by the bricks which were pelted at them when they were pelting bricks, &c., at the complainant party."

The Deputy Magistrate then proceeded to deal with the evidence called by one of the accused to prove an alibi and having found that proved acquitted him.

He found all the other accused guilty and convicted them under s. 147 of the Penal Code, and sentenced them to rigorous imprisonment for four months, and directed that each be bound over under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure in the sum of Rs. 100 to keep the peace for a period of one year, from the date of the expiry of the sentence of imprisonment.

[830] The accused then appealed to the Sessions Judge, who delivered the following judgment:—

"On a consideration of all the evidence I think this conviction is right. I do not believe an attack was made originally on the Kumarkhalli hat. It was too late for that, and it is evident that the case before the Police for the Kumarkhalli men was, that the fighting was all on the west and not the east of the bridge. There is no doubt I think that Asman Ali was seized by the Kumarkhalli men, possibly for a different reason than he gives, but of the seizure on the west side of the bridge I am satisfied. Then his side turned out and the Kumarkhalli men were driven back. There was a stand at the iron bridge, and when a few men were hurt the fight ceased. Now each of the appellants is shown either to have been concerned in the attack on Asman Ali or to have been one of the second party that came to assist the first party when Asman's side came to his rescue. So that all were members of the unlawful assembly, and were guilty of rioting. I dismiss the appeal."

The accused now moved the High Court to send for the record and quash the conviction under the provisions of s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The grounds on which the interference of the High Court was sought were—(1) that the facts found did not make out an offence under s. 147; (2) that both the lower Courts erred in convicting under that section without finding what was the common object of the assembly alleged to be unlawful; (3) that the order under s. 106 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was bad in law; and (4) that the sentence was too severe.

Mr. J. G. Apcar on these grounds applied to the High Court for a rule.

JUDGMENT.

The judgment of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J.) was delivered by

PETHERAM, C.J. (RAMPINI, J., concurring).—On the 17th of April last the Deputy Magistrate of Barrisal framed a charge against five persons, by which he charged them with having committed rioting on the 27th of March at Naratham, by forming an unlawful assembly, and assaulting Faisuddi and Mofizuddi, by throwing brickbats in prosecution of that common object. Witnesses were called and examined for the prosecution on the 17th and 18th, for the defence on the 25th, and on the 30th the Deputy Magistrate gave his judgment, by which he convicted four out of the five accused, and sentenced them to four months' [831] rigorous imprisonment, and to execute bonds to keep the peace for one year. The judgment is long, rather rambling, and, undoubtedly, does not, as it should have done, find what was the common object which made the assembly, of which the prisoners were members, an unlawful one, and after reading it carefully several times, I am by no means sure that I understand now what he thinks the common object was, and I must add that for this reason the judgment is extremely defective. The prisoners appealed to the Judge, who on the 12th of May gave his judgment affirming the conviction and sentences, and I am compelled to say that his judgment is even more defective than that of the Deputy Magistrate, as he not only does not himself find what was the common object of the assembly, but throws doubts on what the Deputy Magistrate may have intended as a finding on the question. In this state of things Mr. Apcar has applied to us for a rule to show cause why the conviction and sentence should not be set aside by this Court, under the powers created by s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, on the ground that the charge does not specify any common object, and that neither of the judgments finds that any common object existed, or what it was, if it did exist. We think that we ought not to grant a rule for such a purpose, unless we should be prepared, on the materials on which we grant it, to make it absolute, or, in other words, to acquit the prisoners, if no cause were shown against it, and we certainly should not be prepared to acquit these persons, merely in consequence of the defects which I have pointed out in the charge, and in both the judgments; because it must be evident that notwithstanding them there may be ample material, in the evidence on this record, on which we should ourselves be prepared to convict the prisoners of the offence of rioting, and to inflict the same punishment, which has been inflicted upon them by the Deputy Magistrate. We accordingly invited Mr. Apear to place the evidence before us with the object of showing us that, upon it, the prisoners ought not to be convicted of rioting. He has done so, to some extent, and we have ourselves since examined it, and so far from thinking that we ought to acquit the prisoners, we think, that there is ample evidence here, which we see no [832] reason to disbelieve, that they were members of an assembly, the common object of which was to prevent, by force, traders from resorting to the new hat, that the assembly in pursuance of that object did make an attack upon the complainant, who was going to the new hat, and afterwards engaged in a battle with the partizans of the owners of the new hat who came up to assist him, and moreover that two of the accused actually took part in the first assault on the complainant, and that they all took part in the fight which followed.

This being the state of the evidence, we think that notwithstanding the defects in the charge, and in the judgments, which are very grave, and which call for a distinct expression of disapproval on our part, there is no necessity in the interests of justice for our interference, and there will be no rule.

THIS was an application under s. 380 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the plaintiff should give security for the costs of the suit, which was one for the recovery of Rs. 8,000, alleged to be payable to the plaintiff as a legatee under the will of Premchand Moonshee. The defendants were the executors who had taken out probate of the will. The application was made in Chambers on the affidavit of the defendant Mutty Lall Ghose, stating that the suit was one for money, and that the plaintiff was a parda nashin lady and not possessed of any immovable property in British India. The application was opposed on behalf of the plaintiff by her son Hira Lall Dutt, who was managing the suit for his mother, and who in his affidavit stated that he was one of the executors of the will of one Woomesh Chunder Mitter, his maternal grandfather, dated 6th February 1892, and that under that will the plaintiff was entitled, as one of the three daughters of the testator, to a one-third share in the residue of all the moveable and immovable property of the testator after provision had been made for the trusts of the will.

The further material facts are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the Court.

Mr. Dunne, for the defendants.

ORDER.

SALE, J.—This is a suit by a legatee to obtain payment of a legacy given to her by the will of her grandfather Prem Chand Moonshee. The will gives various legacies amounting to Rs. 68,000. It also gives an annuity of Rs. 5 a month, and directs that provision be made for the maintenance of a widow, for the support of a charitable dispensary, and for the performance of certain sradh ceremonies. It then dedicates the residue of the estate for the sheba of the family thakoor and appoints three of the testator's sister's sons executors and *shebait*s.

The defendants, being two of the executors, proved the will. The value of the estate as given in their petition for probate is Rs. 1,17,999-5-9

[834] The plaintiff states in her plaint that, notwithstanding repeated demands, she has failed to obtain payment of the legacy from the defendants.

The defendants in their written statement say (1) that the plaintiff is a person of unsound mind and was incapable of instituting the suit and is incapable of maintaining it; (2) that the assets are insufficient; that they offered to pay a proportion of the legacy, not to the legatee herself, she being under disability, but to any person legally authorized to receive the same.

The defendants have now applied under s. 380 of the Code for an order requiring the plaintiff to give security for her costs of suit. The application is supported by an affidavit, which states that the suit is for money, that the plaintiff is a parda nashin lady and that she is not possessed of any immoveable property within British India.

The plaintiff's son has in opposition to this application made an affidavit, in which he says that, acting for his mother, he frequently asked the defendants for payment of the legacy; that he was put off from time to time with the promise of payment; that he then caused a letter of demand to be written by an attorney, but received no reply; that the allegation in the written statement of the defendants that the plaintiff is of unsound mind is "wholly false;" that the allegation in the affidavit used in support of this application that the plaintiff is not possessed of any immoveable property within British India is also untrue; and then follows this allegation: "Baboo Woomesh Chunder Mitter who was my grandfather by his will gave and devised all his moveable and immoveable estate in favour of his three daughters, of whom my mother is one, in equal shares for their respective lives, and after their death in favour of their respective heirs per stirpes."

There is no dispute that the plaintiff is a parda nashin lady, and that this is a suit for "money." But it is said on the part of the plaintiff that, having regard to the terms of her father's will, she is possessed of immoveable property within British India.

Under this will, the immoveable properties left by the plaintiff's father are to be held by the executors upon trust to pay the residue of the income after providing for certain specified [835] trusts, to his three daughters in equal shares. I think it would be unduly straining the language of the section to hold that the plaintiff, being entitled to a beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immoveable property, becomes thereby possessed of "sufficient immoveable property" within the meaning of the section. The question then is whether it follows of necessity that the Court is bound to make the order asked for, or whether it has a discretion in exercising the power given under the section.

It has been contended on the part of the defendants that the power is not discretionary but obligatory, and that the word "may" in the latter clause of the section must be read as "shall." I am not aware of any cases now regarded as authorities which can be cited for the proposition that the word "may" is, in any connection, to be read as meaning "shall," though, as explained in the case of Delhi and London Bank v. Orchard (1), the word "shall" may under certain circumstances be substituted for the word "may." On the contrary, in Julius v. Bishop of Oxford (2) Lord Selborne speaking of the words "may," "it shall be lawful," and the like, says "they are potential and never in themselves significant of any obligation." And Lord Cairns in the same case says of the same words: "They confer a faculty or power, and they do not of themselves do more than confer a faculty or power." So also Cotton, L.J., says: "I think that great misconception is caused by saying that in some cases 'may' means 'must.' It never can mean 'must' so long as the English language retains its meaning, but it gives a power, and then it may be a question in what cases where a Judge has a power given him by the word

(1) 3 C. 47 (57).

(2) L.R. 5 App. Cas. 214.

'may' it becomes his duty to exercise it"—In re Baker Nichols v. Baker (1). See also the observations of Jessel, M.R., in Morgan v. Thomas (2).

No doubt when a power or faculty is given to the Court that it may be exercised for a particular purpose or for the benefit of particular persons under certain specified circumstances, and it is shown that the particular circumstances exist under which it was contemplated that the power should be exercised, then it [836] may be that an obligation is cast upon the Court to exercise that power. In that sense words which are in themselves enabling merely may under certain circumstances impose an obligatory duty.

The object of the section clearly is to provide for the protection of defendants in certain cases where in the event of success they may have difficulty in realizing their costs.

The latter clause of the section was introduced by the Debtors Act (VI of 1888) which prohibits the arrest or imprisonment of a woman in execution of a decree for money, and it is to be observed that it is only in suits for money that the power given under this clause of the section can be exercised. When therefore litigation is harassing and vexatious, or where the real plaintiff is not before the Court, or where, though liable in certain events for the defendant's costs, the plaintiff is a person of no means, in such cases the Court would doubtless exercise this power for the protection of the defendant. But there are cases in which the plaintiff in a suit for money (the claim being real and open to no objection) cannot be rendered liable for the defendant's costs of suit. In illustration I may refer to an administration suit by a creditor or legatee where the claim is admitted, or to a suit on a mortgage or promissory note, where there is no defence. Is it to be supposed that it was intended that the defendant in such cases should be in a position to ask as a matter of absolute right that security may be given for costs that he may choose to incur needlessly? It surely was not intended by this section that a perverse litigant should have the right of calling on the Court to assist him in throwing an obstacle vexatiously and unnecessarily in the way of a woman desirous of prosecuting a just claim, which possibly is not even denied.

It seems to me that the power given under the section is discretionary and one which the Court ought or ought not to exercise according to the circumstances of each case, and that, unless it is shown that the exercise of its power is necessary for the reasonable protection of the defendant, the Court ought not to interfere. This, I think, was in substance the opinion of Wilson, J., who in a similar application used these words: "I should be very sorry to lay down, and I guard myself against [837] laying down, that this section is imperative on the Court, and that the Courts have no discretion but to order security to be given—Degumbari Dabi v. Aushootosh Banerjee (3).

Then what are the facts here? The plaintiff as a legatee is entitled to ask for payment of her legacy. The defendants are in possession of the estate, which was originally of large value. They make no reply to the plaintiff's demand for payment. They do not even inform her of the position of the estate, which according to the case now made in their written statement is not sufficient to pay the legacies in full. The plaintiff therefore had no alternative but to seek the assistance of the Court. It is clear that the suit must proceed in the form of an administration suit, and the plaintiff must in the ordinary course obtain a decree for the amount of her legacy without abatement if the assets should prove sufficient; otherwise subject to abatement. In either case the plaintiff, as plaintiff in an administration suit, will be entitled to be paid her costs out of the general estate. In neither case can she be deprived of her costs or be made liable to pay the defendant's costs.

The present application therefore was wholly unnecessary and must be refused with costs.

It is scarcely necessary to add that it was not sought to support this application on any ground connected with the plaintiff's disability alleged in the defendant's written statement. The grounds relied on were merely those indicated in s. 380 of the Code.

BENI MADHUB NAG (Petitioner) v. MATI LAL DAS, OVERSEER, HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY (Opposite party).^{*} [6th June, 1894.]

Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act V of 1876), s. 313—Bye-Law—"Ultra vires"— Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), s. 2.

[838] Where a Municipality passed a bye-law purporting to be made under the provisions of s. 313 of Bengal Act V of 1876, which was duly sanctioned by the local Government, to the effect that persons, failing to trim trees overhanging tanks which were likely to foul the water with their falling leaves, after service of notice on them to that effect, should be liable to a penalty, and where subsequent to the repeal of that Act by Bengal Act III of 1884 a person was convicted and fined for having disobeyed such bye-law.

Held, that the conviction was bad, as the bye-law was not one authorised by the terms of s. 313, and was consequently ultra vires, and s. 2 of Bengal Act III of 1884 could not make valid a bye-law which was originally invalid.

THE petitioner in this case was charged at the instance of an overseer of the Howrah Municipality with failing to comply with the terms of a notice served on him requiring him to cut and trim the branches of certain trees belonging to him which overhung a tank belonging to a private person.

The notice was in the following terms:—

"Take notice that you are hereby required within three days from the date of service hereof to cut your sujna trees overhanging the tank at Khetter Banerjee's lane belonging to Prosonno Coomar Nag, as the said trees are liable to foul the water of the above tank by the leaves thereof falling into it. If you fail to do so within the term specified above you will be liable to a fine of Rs. 10 and to a daily fine of Rs. 2 until the terms of this notice are complied with.

(Sd.) N. S. DUTT,
Vice-Chairman."

Dated the 30th November 1893.

^{*} Criminal Motion, No. 252 of 1894, against the order passed by Babu Nogendro Nath Pal Chowdhry, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, dated the 16th of March 1894.

This notice purported to be issued under bye-law No. 83. On receipt of this notice the petitioner applied to the Vice-Chairman to be informed where the bye-law in question was to be found, as no such bye-law existed amongst those passed by the Howrah Municipality and sanctioned by the local Government under Act III of 1884, and in reply he was informed that the bye-law in question was published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 14th January 1880, and it appeared to have been passed and sanctioned under the provisions of s. 313 of Bengal Act V of 1876.

The bye-law was in the following terms:—

"Bye-law 83.—The Commissioners may give notice in writing to the owner of any trees or shrubs overhanging any tank and [839] liable to foul the water thereof to cut or trim the same in such a manner as that they should not overhang the tank.

"Whoever fails to comply with such requisition shall be liable to a fine which shall not exceed Rs. 10 and to a daily fine which shall not exceed Rs. 2 until such requisition be complied with."

The petitioner objected that the bye-law was not in existence and had no application, the Act under which it was passed having been repealed and new bye-laws having been passed and sanctioned under the new Act; he also objected that the prosecution had not been sanctioned by the Chairman, and raised other defences which it is not material to notice here.

The Deputy Magistrate overruled all the objections, and convicted the petitioner sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 5.

The petitioner then applied to the High Court to set aside the conviction on the ground that the bye-law was ultra vires, not being warranted by the provisions of Bengal Act V of 1876; that even if once good it had no force after the repeal of that Act; that it could only have been good in respect of Municipal tanks and never could refer to a private tank; and that the prosecution was bad inasmuch as the sanction of the Chairman had never been obtained or specifically given as required by law.

On the application a rule was issued which now came on for hearing.

Mr. M. Ghose and Babu Atya Charan Bose, for the petitioner.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Leith), for the opposite party.

The arguments are sufficiently stated in the judgment of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J.) which was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The petitioner Beni Madhub Nag has been convicted under bye-law 83 of the bye-laws of the Howrah Municipality for failing, in pursuance of a notice issued to him, to cut certain branches of a tree belonging to him which are alleged to overhang a tank belonging to a private individual and to be likely to foul its water. He has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 5.

Mr. Ghose on behalf of the petitioner contends that this bye-law, which purports to have been framed under the provisions of s. 313, Bengal Act V of 1876, is not warranted by the provisions of that section, and therefore cannot be legally enforced.

[840] The bye-law runs as follows:—(see 21 C. 838.)

Now, on looking at the provisions of s. 313 of Bengal Act V of 1876 it is clear that this bye-law is not one such as the Commissioners of Municipalities were authorised to frame under this section. Section 2 of Bengal Act III of 1884 no doubt lays down that all bye-laws prescribed under any enactment repealed by that Act shall be deemed to have been prescribed under that Act, and this bye-law 83 has undoubtedly been prescribed and sanctioned by the local Government under Bengal Act V of 1876. But Mr. Ghose contends that the word "prescribed" in s. 2 of Act III of 1884 must mean "duly" or "lawfully prescribed," and that s. 2 of Act III of 1884 cannot make intra vires under section III of 1884 a bye-law which is obviously ultra vires under Act V of 1876. This argument appears to us to be sound, and we think the objection raised is fatal to the conviction. We accordingly set it aside and direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

RAM KANYE AUDHICARY v. CALLY CHURN DEY AND ANOTHER.*
[12th June, 1894.]

Interest—Rule of damdupat—Hindu law—Usury—Account directed by decree in mortgage suit between Hindus—Interest for periods before, during and after the six months allowed by decree for redemption.

Where a mortgage decree, in a suit between Hindus, directed on account to be taken of what was due to the plaintiff for principal and interest, the latter to be computed at the contract rate for six months, provided for redemption on payment of the amount due within the six months, and directed in case of default of payment that interest due be added to the principal sum, interest thereafter to be computed on the aggregate amount at 6 per cent.; Held, that in taking the account the rule of damdupat was rightly applied to the interest accruing on the mortgage debt both previous to and during the six months allowed for redemption, notwithstanding the form of the decree, (Nobin Chunder Bannerjee v. Romesh Chunder Ghose (1) referred to); and that the same rule was applicable to the interest accruing after the period of six months had elapsed.

[841] When the rule of damdupat has once been applied in any account, directed to be taken by the Court, and interest equal in amount to the principal sum has been allowed in the account, the application of such rule has the effect of preventing the allowance of any further interest, not only for the period of six months allowed for redemption, but also subsequently without limitation of time.

THIS was a suit on a mortgage, dated 26th January 1884, in which the plaintiff and defendants were Hindus. By the decree made in the suit, dated 2nd June 1892, it was referred to the Registrar to take an account of what would be due to the plaintiff and the defendant Doorga Das Ghose, a second mortgagee, under a mortgage, dated 19th August 1890, respectively, at the end of six months from the date when the report of the Registrar should be countersigned by a Judge, for principal and interest on their respective mortgages, and to tax the costs; and it was ordered that on the defendant Cally Churn Dey paying what was found by the Registrar's report to be due on the respective mortgages with costs and interest at 5 per cent. per annum the mortgaged properties should be reconveyed, but in default of such payment the principal and interest found due should at the end of the six months be added together, and thereafter bear interest at 6 per cent. per annum until realization; and it was also ordered that the mortgaged property should be sold by the Registrar, and the sale proceeds be paid into Court to the credit of the suit in order that they might be applied in payment of the amounts payable to the plaintiff and the defendant Doorga Das Ghose respectively in the manner provided by the decree. The Registrar on 25th August 1892 made his report, which was countersigned by Trevelyan, J., and by the report it was found that on 5th March 1893 (i.e., six months after the report had been countersigned) there would be due to the plaintiff Rs. 6,000 for principal and interest on his mortgage, and to the defendant Doorga Das Ghose Rs. 3,386-6-2 for principal and interest on his mortgage. Default in payment was made by the mortgagor, and under an order of Court, dated 15th April 1893, the Registrar put the mortgaged properties up for sale on 25th November 1893, and they were purchased by Deva Prosad Sarbadhicari for Rs. 10,250 which was paid by the purchaser into Court to the credit of the suit. The sale was confirmed and a certificate of sale issued, and there was in [842] Court to the credit of the suit Rs. 9,767-15-4. The plaintiff's taxed costs amounted to Rs. 597-4-3, and the plaintiff now applied that that sum, together with the amount found due to him for principal and interest on his mortgage, should be paid to him from the sum in Court to the credit of the suit.

The application came on in Chambers, the defendant Doorga Das Ghose, the second mortgagee, appearing at the hearing.

ORDER.

SALE, J.—This is a suit between Hindus on a mortgage to secure the repayment of a loan with interest. There is a second mortgage which was executed in favour of the second defendant, but no question arises as to that mortgage.

The decree, so far as it relates to the plaintiff, directs an account to be taken of what is due to him for principal and interest, the latter to be computed at the contract rate for six months. It then directs that upon payment within six months of what shall be due for principal and interest, and allowed on taxation for costs, with interest on such costs at six per cent. per annum, the property under mortgage be retransferred: but that in default of payment the interest computed at the contract rate for six months be added to the principal sum, that thereafter interest be computed on the aggregate amount, that the property under mortgage be sold, that the sale proceeds be paid into Court and applied first in payment of the amount payable to the plaintiff under the decree for principal, interest and costs with interest thereon.

The Registrar took the account, and finding that the interest exceeded the principal sum, he allowed for interest a sum equal to the principal sum, and disallowed the rest under the rule of damdupat. The report of the Registrar was accepted by the parties.

Default in payment having been made, a final order for sale was obtained, under which the property was sold by the Registrar, and the sale proceeds were paid into Court to be applied as directed by the decree. The plaintiff, as first mortgagee, being entitled to be paid in priority, has applied for payment of the principal and interest allowed in the report, with interest on the aggregate amount at six per cent., and also of the taxed costs with interest thereon at six per cent.

[843] The application is made on summons to the second mortgagee who has appeared. The mortgagor was not served with the summons and has not appeared.

In support of the application the case of Balkrishna Bhalchandra v. Gopal Raghunath (1) was cited. In that case the plaintiff obtained a money decree with interest. After some years, application was made for execution. The interest payable under the decree exceeded the principal sum, and the question was whether the amount of the excess should not be disallowed under the rule of damdupat. The Court held that the rule of damdupat did not apply to interest recoverable in execution.

In the present case the rule of damdupat has been applied, and there is no question that it has been rightly applied to the interest accruing on the mortgage debt both previous to and during the period of six months allowed for redemption, notwithstanding the form of the decree—Nobin Chunder Bannerjee v. Romesh Chunder Ghose (2). But it is contended that this should not prevent effect being given to the decree so far as it directs that at the end of six months the interest due be added to the principal sum, and that thereafter interest be computed on the aggregate amount at six per cent. This direction as to the allowance of interest at the contract rate on the aggregate amount is a usual direction inserted as of course in all decrees for an account in mortgage suits without having in view the rule of damdupat. If this form of decree does not prevent the application of the rule to the interest accruing due during the period of six months, it is difficult to see why it should prevent the further operation of the rule so as to admit of interest being computed after the period of six months on the aggregate amount of principal sum and interest allowed in the report. It appears to me that when the rule of damdupat is once applied in any account, directed to be taken by the Court, and interest equal in amount to the principal sum has been allowed in the account, the application of such rule has the effect of preventing the allowance of any further interest, not only for the period of six months allowed for redemption, but also subsequently without limitation of time.

[844] Interest on the taxed costs of suit stands on a different footing, but that has been allowed in the report and is not in question.

This view of the operation of the rule of damdupat appears to have been taken by the Bombay Court in the case of Ramchandra Mankeshwar v. Bhimrav Rovji (3).

There will be an order in terms of the summons except as to further interest.

Sale for arrears of Revenue—Act XI of 1859, ss. 6, 13, 14 and 33—Proceedings when, share of estate is not sold at auction sale—Payment of arrears before sale without obtaining exemption from sale—Ground for annulling sale not declared and specified appeal to Commissioner.

The plaintiffs and defendants were sharers in a certain estate, the plaintiffs being owners of a joint share, and the defendants the owners of other shares, in respect of which separate accounts had been opened in the Collector's register. The plaintiffs in March 1890 made default in the payment of Government revenue for their share, and it was advertised to be put up for sale on 18th September 1890, under ss. 6 and 13 of Act XI of 1859, for recovery of the amount due Rs. 18-6. On the 16th September the plaintiff paid into the treasury of the Collectorate the amount of arrears due, and made an application that the joint share might be exempted from sale; receipts were given for the amount paid in, but no order was made on the application, and the share was not exempted from sale. On the 16th September the joint share was put up for sale, but there being no bids, the sale was postponed, and on the same day the Collector made an order under s. 14 of Act XI of 1859 that, unless the arrears were paid by the other sharers (the defendants) within ten days, the whole estate would be put up for sale. Notices of this order, provided for by a rule made under the Act by the Board of Revenue, were given to the serving peon on [845] 2nd October, for service on the defendants, and the arrears were paid in by some of the defendants on the 4th and by others on the 7th October, and eventually the Collector, acting under s. 14 of the Act, granted on the 5th December 1890 a certificate of purchase, and gave delivery of possession to the defendants. The plaintiffs appealed to the Commissioner, but their appeal was rejected on 10th March 1891. In a suit for a declaration that the proceedings taken by the Collector under s. 14 of the Act were illegal, and conveyed no title to the defendants, and for possession of the joint share with mesne profits: Held by PETHERAM, C.J., and BEVERLEY, J. (AMEER ALI, J., dissenting) that the Collector not having exempted the share from sale, the payment by the plaintiff of the arrears on 16th September was no bar to the proceedings taken under s. 14 of the Act.

Held, also, that the defendants' purchase, was not made invalid by the fact of their not having paid in the arrears within ten days from the 18th September, the day fixed for the sale: the ten days in s. 14 run from the time when notice of the Collector's order is given to the other sharers, and not from the date of the sale. Held, further, that it was not open to the plaintiffs to take this latter objection, as it was not declared and specified in their grounds of appeal to the Commissioner in accordance with s. 33 of the Act. Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (1) followed.

Per AMEER ALI, J., contra.

Per PETHERAM, C. J.—Section 33 applies to sales under s. 14 as well as to sales by public auction under the Act.

Semble.—There is nothing in Act XI of 1859 which would have prevented the plaintiffs from purchasing the share themselves when it was put up for sale on 18th September.

Per BEVERLEY, J.—Under s. 6 of the Act the sale, if it had taken place on the 18th September, would have conveyed a good title to the defendants; and under s. 14 they are expressly declared to have "the same rights as if the share had been purchased by them at the sale."

Per AMEER ALI, J.—The proceedings provided for by s. 14 do not apply in a case where there have been no bids at the sale. Section 33 is not applicable to a

[R., 34 C. 381 (391, 392) = 5 C.L.J. 425.]

THE plaintiffs in the suit out of which this appeal arose were the proprietors of a joint share in a mehal called Sonbursa (the total yearly jama on which was Rs. 720), which share formed a 6-anna 8-pie share of the mehal at a jama of Rs. 300 ; and the defendants were the owners of the remaining 9-annas 4-pie [846] share at a jama of Rs. 420, in respect of which they had opened three separate accounts in the Collector's register under s. 10 of Act XI of 1859.

The joint share which was owned by the plaintiffs was, in consequence of there being due on it arrears of Government revenue Rs. 18-6 for the instalment due for March 1890, advertized to be put up for sale on the 18th September 1890 for recovery of the amount due. On 16th September the whole amount of arrears due were paid into the treasury of the Collectorate on behalf of the plaintiffs, and at the same time an application was put in that the estate might be exempted from sale. Receipts were given for the amount paid in, but no order was passed on the application. On the 18th September, the plaintiff's share was put up for sale, but there were no bidders for it, and the following record was made by the Collector :—

" No bid : Proceedings to be taken under s. 14.

(Sd.) J. A. B.

18th September 1890."

" It is ordered—

" That the record-keeper do without delay write down the names of the proprietors of the khatas of this mehal with their residences.

Dated 18th September 1890."

On the same day the following notice under s. 14 of Act XI of 1859 was issued by the Collector to the defendants under a rule of the Board of Revenue, which provides for such notice being given :—

" Whereas joint mehal Sonbursa, pergana Manghi, bearing towzi No. 3653 and a jama of Rs. 300 was advertized for auction-sale fixed for 18th September 1890, for arrears of Government revenue on account of instalment of 28th March 1890, but at the time it was put up for auction-sale no one made any bid ; therefore the auction-sale was postponed and notice issued by order of this date,—you will under s. 14, Act XI of 1859, pay in the whole of the arrear against the aforesaid share within ten days, and purchase the aforesaid share ; otherwise the entire mehal will be sold by auction and the arrear realized. "

This notice was issued to the serving peon for service on the 2nd October, but of the precise dates when it was served on the defendants there was no proof. On the 4th October the amount of arrears due was deposited by some of the defendants and by others of the defendants on the 7th October, and eventually [847] the Collector on 5th December 1890 granted a sale-certificate to the defendants as being the purchasers, and made possession of the property over to them.

The plaintiffs previously to this on 1st October had presented a petition objecting to the proceedings which had been taken under s. 14 as being illegal, and stating that no arrears were due, but this petition was rejected by the Collector on 6th October 1890. The plaintiffs also appealed to the Commissioner from the Collector's order of 5th December, but their appeal was rejected on 10th March 1891. In the appeal to the Commissioner no objection was taken that the defendants had not paid in the arrears within the period of ten days from the Collector's order to that effect.

The plaintiffs brought this suit for a declaration that the defendants did not acquire any right in the joint share of the mehal by their purchase under colour of s. 14 of Act XI of 1859 as against the plaintiffs, and for possession of the joint share with mesne profits; and they submitted (inter alia) that the proceedings taken by the Collector under that section were wholly unauthorized and illegal, and that they had sustained substantial injury by reason of such proceedings.

The defence, so far as it is material to this report, was that the proceedings of the Collector were lawful and valid; that the defendants were consequently lawfully in possession of the joint share of the mehal; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to urge in support of their suit any ground which they omitted to take in their appeal to the Commissioner.

The Subordinate Judge found that all arrears had been paid off on the 16th September, and that on the day of sale there were no arrears due to justify the proceedings under s. 14 of Act XI of 1859, and that the proceedings taken by the Collector under that section were consequently illegal, and the defendants acquired no title under them. He passed a decree, therefore, in favour of the plaintiffs.

The defendants appealed to the High Court.

Moulvie Mahomed Yusuff and Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerjee, for the appellants.

Mr. Dunne and Moulvie Serajul Islam, for the respondents.

[848] The appeal came on before BEVERLEY and AMEER ALI, JJ., who differed in opinion and the case was referred under s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code to PETHGRAM, C.J.

The following judgments were delivered:—

JUDGMENTS.

AMEER ALI, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs under the following circumstances:—

A revenue-paying estate, called mehal Sonbursa was jointly owned by a number of proprietors, three sets of whom appear to have opened, under s. 10 of Act XI of 1859, separate accounts in the Collector's Register for the payment of their respective shares of the Government revenue. The plaintiffs, who were the proprietors of the remaining share of the estate, were liable for the share of the revenue in respect thereof.

A default having been made in the payment of the March instalment of the revenue due for the share belonging to the plaintiffs, it was advertized by the Collector under the provisions of s. 13 of the Act for sale on the 18th of September 1890.

On the 16th of September the plaintiffs paid into the Collectorate the amount due and received a chalan or receipt therefor. No order, however, was made by the Collector under s. 18 exempting the property from sale. On the 18th the plaintiff's share in the mehal was put up to sale as advertized, but there being no bidders, the Collector recorded an order in the following terms (see 21 C. p. 846):—

On the same day the following notice was issued upon the other sharers in the mehal (see 21 C. p. 846):—

On the 4th and 7th of October respectively the defendants deposited in the Collectorate the amount of arrear for which the plaintiffs' share was advertized for sale, and on the 5th of December the Collector gave the defendants, purchasers of the plaintiff's share, a certificate under s. 14 of the Act. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal to the Commissioner, who rejected the same on the 10th of March 1891.

They thereupon brought this suit for a declaration that the proceedings taken by the Collector under s. 14 of the Act were unauthorised and illegal and conveyed no title to the defendants, and for recovery of possession of the property.

[849] The Subordinate Judge has decreed the plaintiffs' claim mainly on two grounds: In the first place he is of opinion that the payment of the arrear on the 16th of September was a bar to a proceeding under s. 14 under which the Collector purported to convey to the sharers the plaintiff's share. In the second place, he has held that, as the defendants did not pay in the amount of arrear within ten days from the date on which the property was put up to auction, the transfer was illegal and void.

The defendants have appealed to this Court, and the learned pleader who appeared on their behalf took exception to both the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge. He contended that as the Collector did not accept the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 16th of September, and did not exempt the property from sale, that payment could not be a bar to the transfer to the defendants; and, secondly, that the period of ten days specified in s. 14 should be taken from service of notice and not from the date of the auction sale, and consequently the payment made by the defendants was within time.

I will take up the latter question first as it seems to me the decision of the case turns upon it.

Now, it is quite clear that the opening of separate accounts by one or more shareholders does not absolve the joint estate from liability for arrears of revenue in respect of any portion of the mehal; it only gives to the shareholders the advantage of throwing the burden primarily on the share from which the arrear is due. The estate remains liable all the same. A reference to s. 13 of the Act makes this perfectly clear. The first part of that section runs thus:—

"Whenever the Collector shall have ordered a separate account or accounts to be kept for one or more shares, if the estate shall become liable to sale for arrears of revenue, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid in the first place shall put up to sale only that share or those shares of the estate from which according to the separate accounts an arrear of revenue may be due."

Then follows the provision relating to the exemption of the share or shares from which no arrear is due:—

[850] "In all such cases notice of the intention of excluding the share or shares from which no arrear is due shall be given in the advertisement of sale prescribed in s. 6 of this Act."

Section 14 shows the position of the other shareholders. It runs thus:—

"If in any case of a sale held according to the provisions of the last preceding section the highest offer for the share exposed to sale shall not equal the amount of arrear due thereupon to the date of sale, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid shall stop the sale and shall declare that the entire estate will be put up to sale for arrears of revenue at a future date, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers or one or more of them shall within ten days purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from such share."

It is clear from these two sections that so long as the defaulting share is not sold, the liability of the joint estate for the Government revenue continues, only in the first instance the defaulting share or shares must be put up to sale; if that proves infructuous then the Collector "shall declare that the entire estate will be put to sale, &c."

There is no provision in the section about any notice to the other recorded sharer or sharers. The Collector is required simply to declare at the time he stops the sale that the entire estate will be put up to sale, in other words, that the existing liability would be enforced against the entire estate unless the other sharers or one or more of them should within ten days purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole amount due. The reason for not requiring any notice of such declaration is obvious from what I have already stated. The entire estate is liable for the revenue, only the particular share is to be put up to sale first; the advertisement of sale prescribed in s. 6 is duly published at the Collector's office, and though in that document the intention of excluding the share or shares from which no arrear was due is notified, owners of the latter know from the notification that the entire estate is in jeopardy, and that the exemption of their shares is only conditional, and that in case the highest bid does not cover the arrear due to Government, the entire estate will be sold unless the other sharers pay in the amount within a limited time and [851] take over the property. Therefore, so far as the liability to sale of the entire estate is concerned, each sharer has the knowledge when the advertisement or notification is issued. It is for them to see whether the defaulting share covers the arrear or not. The law assumes that the other sharers are present and know whether the highest bid reaches that point; and for this reason makes no provision for a notice of the Collector's declaration, which must be made simultaneously with the stoppage of the infructuous sale.

It has been contended that the Board of Revenue has framed a rule providing for the issue of a notice. It is a commendable rule, if I may say so, showing that the Government is not disposed to apply the sale law, which is drastic enough, more harshly than it can help, and therefore provides for the issue of a notice to the other sharers. But the Board cannot, by any rule, supplement the law which is complete in itself. Nor can a remedial executive rule designed for one purpose, that is, for protecting from sale the shares of others than the defaulting sharer without some notice, be construed as enlarging the time fixed for payment by the sharers, and thus depriving a man of his property without the sanction of the law.

If the entire estate is sold without the notice required by the Board's rule, or within ten days from service of such notice, the sharers not in default may, on that ground, obtain a reversal of the sale, but that rule, to my mind, will not warrant the Collector handing over one man's property to another without strict compliance with the law under which alone that power can be exercised. As I understand s. 14 of Act XI of 1859 it gives to the other sharers a statutory right of pre-emption so to speak in respect of the defaulting share. The right is of an exceptional character; it entitles them to obtain the property which may be of considerable value for the merest trifle without any competition. In order to claim such a right and to enable the Collector to give effect to such a claim they must show a strict compliance with the provisions of the law.

It is to be observed that the section speaks of the "highest offer," not equalling the amount of arrear due. To my mind these words show that the law contemplates the exercise of the [852] exceptional power given to the Collector under s. 14 in a case where the property is either so valueless or so peculiarly situated that at a competitive sale the highest offer does not, in fact, reach the amount due; in other words, after it has been tested in open market by actual bidding that the property could not fetch the amount in question. It does not in my opinion contemplate a case where from some accidental reasons there have been no bids. It is impossible to conceive that but for some accidental circumstance there would be no offer at all even to the extent of 18 rupees for the property in suit, which the Judge finds to be of considerable value.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is right in holding that the defendants, not having made the payment within ten days from the 18th of September 1890, acquired no right whatsoever to the property which was purported to be conveyed to them by the Collector, and that his proceeding is illegal and void and without jurisdiction.

If the intendment of the law be that the declaration of the Collector should come to the knowledge of the sharers, there is nothing to show that it must be by a formal written notice. I take it that if the defendants had notice or information of the declaration made by the Collector on the 18th, the absence of a written notice would not absolve the estate from its liability to sale.

There is absolutely nothing on the record to show that the defendants had no knowledge of the Collector's declaration on the 18th, or in fact when they first became aware of it.

Assuming, however, as it is contended on behalf of the appellants, that a formal written notice was necessary, I find that it bears date the 18th of September, the date on which the defaulting share was put up to sale. There is not an iota of evidence as to when the notices were received by the defendants. The endorsements on the notices in my opinion are no evidence of the facts they purport to mention; it is perfectly possible that they may be post-dated, which is by no means uncommon. The person who served the notice has not been examined, nor have the defendants given their evidence to show when they received the notices. Nor is there the smallest explanation why the notices, [853] dated as they are the 18th of September, were not issued until the 2nd of October. If the defendants want to avail themselves of the district letter of the law, they must satisfy by strict proof that they came within its provisions. Courts of justice are often compelled to enforce the law in all its stringency regardless of all considerations of individual hardship or injury to private rights, but they are not constrained to make every assumption in favour of the co-sharer claiming an exceptional right.

But it is objected on behalf of the defendants that inasmuch as this ground was not "declared and specified" in the appeal before the Commissioner the plaintiffs are precluded under the provisions of s. 33 from raising it in the Civil Court; and in support of their contention they rely on the case of Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (1). This brings me to the consideration of the question whether the transfer by the Collector of the defaulting share to the co-sharers is a "sale" coming within the purview of s. 33. That section so far as is material for the purposes of the present discussion runs as follows: "No sale for arrears of revenue or other demands, realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable made after the passing of this Act, shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except upon the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of this Act, and then only on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of, and no such sale shall be annulled upon such ground unless such ground shall have been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner under s. 25 of this Act." Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case upon which the defendants rely express themselves thus: "Giving, however, full weight to these considerations their Lordships, having regard to the scheme of the Act and the express direction contained in s. 33, are of opinion that in every case where a sale for arrears of revenue is impeached as being 'contrary to the provisions' of Act XI of 1859, no grounds of objection are open to the plaintiff which have not been declared and specified in an appeal to the Commissioner." And then follow the significant words: "In the opinion of their Lordships a sale is a sale made under Act XI of 1859 within the [854] meaning of that Act, when it is a sale for arrears of Government revenue held by the Collector or other officer authorized to hold sales under the Act, although it may be contrary to the provisions of the Act either by reason of some irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or in consequence of some express provision for exemption having been directly contravened."

The question then is—Is a purchase under s. 14 "a sale held by the Collector under the Act?" Section 19 tells us how sales are to be made or held. "Sales shall ordinarily be made by the Collector or other officer as aforesaid in the Land Revenue office at the sudder station of the district; provided however that it shall be competent to the Board of Revenue to prescribe a place for holding sales other than such office whenever they shall consider it beneficial to the parties concerned." Sections 20 and 21 relate to the procedure to be observed at the time of making "the sale." Section 22 says: "The party who shall be declared the purchaser of an estate or share of an estate at any such public sale as aforesaid shall be required to deposit immediately, or as soon after the conclusion of the sale of the estate or share as the Collector or other officer aforesaid, &c." Compare also the phraseology of s. 14 "if such purchase be completed" with that of s. 28 "immediately upon a sale becoming final." These and the succeeding sections show clearly that the sale contemplated in s. 33 and referred to by their Lordships is a public sale held either in the Land Revenue office at the sudder station of the district or any other place, which the Board may prescribe whenever they consider it beneficial to the parties concerned—a sale at which bidders are or can be present, and in which there is a possibility of competition; otherwise the provisions of s. 19 become meaningless, and the reference to what is "beneficial to the parties concerned" superfluous. It could never have been the intention of the Legislature to designate the dealing under s. 14 as a "sale" under the Act. Section 14 itself shows clearly to my mind the distinction between a "sale" under the Act and the proceeding by which the Collector conveys the defaulting share to the sharers. The latter clause of the section runs thus: "If such purchase be completed, the Collector, or other officer as aforesaid, shall give such certificate and delivery [855] of possession as are provided for in ss. 18 and 19 of this Act to the purchaser or purchasers, who shall have the same rights as if the share had been purchased by him or them at the sale. If no such purchase be made within ten days as aforesaid the entire estate shall be sold after notification for such period and publication in such manner as is prescribed in s. 6 of this Act." It gives on the completion of the "purchase" and the delivery of the certificate to the purchaser or purchasers the same rights as if the share had been purchased by him or them at "the sale"—the sale which was to be held under s. 13 in accordance with the provisions of s. 6. If the purchase under s. 14 was a "sale" it would not only be unnecessary but absurd to say that the purchasers would have the same rights as if they had purchased at "the sale" which was advertised in accordance with the provisions of s. 6, and which could only be held under the guarantees of s. 19.

As I mentioned before, to my mind, s. 14 gives to the sharers a statutory right of pre-emption, so to speak, subject to a statutory obligation. It gives to the Collector, subject to the same conditions, the power of handing over the property of one who was primarily liable for the arrears which had fallen due in respect of the estate to others equally liable, though their liability can be enforced only at a later stage. All the elements which constitute a "sale" are wanting here; there is no competition, there are no bidders, no advertisements and no publicity, and the price is the arrear due which may be a mere trifle compared to the value of the property. What their Lordships in the Privy Council had in view was, as it seems to me, the case of a person buying in open market at a "public sale" in competition with others. I think therefore the objection of the defendants founded on s. 33 is untenable.

In the view I take of the case it is unnecessary to consider whether the payment made by the plaintiffs on the 16th of September was or was not a bar to the transfer by the Collector. But as the question has been raised and discussed I think it better to express my opinion on the point.

As I have already mentioned, in my opinion, the transfer under s. 14 is not a sale under the Act. Section 6 lays down the [856] procedure for issuing notifications, &c., and provides that:—"Except as hereinafter provided all estates or shares of estates so specified shall, on the day notified for sale, or on the day or days following, be put up to public auction by, and in the presence of, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, and shall be sold to the highest bidder, and no payment, or tender of payment, made after sunset of the said latest day of payment shall bar or interfere with the sale either at the time of sale or after its conclusion." The sale referred to at the end of the section is the public sale by auction, the procedure of which is laid down in ss. 19, 20 and 21. Section 8 declares as follows:—

"No claim to abatement or remission of revenue, unless the same shall have been allowed by the authority of Government, and no private demand or cause of action whatever held or supposed to be held by any defaulter against Government, shall bar or render void or voidable a sale under this Act; nor shall the plea that money belonging to the defaulter and sufficient to pay the arrear of revenue due was in the Collector's hands bar or render void or voidable a sale under this Act, unless such money stand in the defaulter's name and without dispute, and unless, after application in due time made by the defaulter or after the written agreement provided for in s. 15 of this Act, the Collector shall have neglected or refused on insufficient grounds to transfer it in payment of the arrear of revenue due," and s. 18, so far as is material, runs thus:—"It shall be competent to the Collector or other officer as aforesaid at any time before the sale of an estate or share of an estate shall have commenced, to exempt such estate or share from sale, and in like manner it shall be competent to the Commissioner of Revenue, at any time before the sale of an estate or share of an estate shall have commenced, to exempt such estate or share from sale, by a special order to the Collector or other officer as aforesaid to that effect in each case, and no such sale shall be legal if held after the receipt of such order of exemption, provided, however, and it is hereby enacted, that the Collector or other officer as aforesaid, or the Commissioner, shall duly record in a proceeding the reason for granting such exemption, and provided also that an order for exemption so issued by the Commissioner [857] shall not affect the legality of a sale which may have taken place before the receipt by the Collector or other officer as aforesaid of the order of exemption."

Throughout these sections the sale referred to is the public sale by auction. The payment on the 16th, in the absence of an order of exemption under s. 18, would have been clearly no bar to a sale on the 18th as advertised; but there is not a word anywhere throughout the Act that an actual payment of the arrear, though after due date, should not be a bar to the Collector proceeding under s. 14 to hand over the property without any formality or guarantees that surround a public sale to the other sharers. In the absence of any provision to that effect or any authority I do not feel inclined to stretch the law beyond its legitimate extent. On the whole, therefore, I agree with the lower Court on both the points, and would accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

BEVERLEY, J.—The plaintiffs in this suit were the owners of a share known as the ijmali or joint share in a certain estate. The defendants are the owners of three other shares in the same estate, in respect of which separate accounts have been opened. In 1890 the plaintiffs defaulted in payment of the Government revenue due upon their share, and their share was accordingly advertised to be sold on the 18th September under ss. 6 and 13 of Act XI of 1859. On the 16th September the plaintiffs tendered the amount in arrear and actually paid it into the Treasury; but the Collector refused to exempt the share from sale, and in fact proceeded to put it up to sale on the 18th. There being no bid, however, the sale was stopped and the Collector made an order under s. 14 of the Act that unless the arrear was paid in within ten days by the other recorded sharers, the entire estate would be put up to sale. The arrear was paid in by some of the defendants on the 4th October and by others on the 7th October, and accordingly the Collector under s. 14 of the Act granted a certificate of purchase and delivery of possession to the defendants.

The plaintiffs thereupon instituted the present suit—(1) for a declaration that the entire proceedings under the Act were illegal and invalid; (2) for recovery of possession of the share; and (3) for mesne profits.

[858] The lower Court has decreed the plaintiffs' suit on two grounds: In the first place, the Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs having paid up the arrear on the 16th September, there was no arrear due when the Collector purported to proceed under s. 14, and that his action was for that reason illegal and invalid. In the second place, he has held that as the arrear was not paid in by the defendants within ten days from September 18th, they acquired no title by their alleged purchase under s. 14.

From this decision the defendants appeal on the ground that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in law on both points, and I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed.

In the first place, I am of opinion that the Subordinate Judge is wrong in assuming that there was no arrear due after the 16th September. The money was no doubt paid into the Treasury on that date, and an application was made to the Collector to receive the amount on account of the arrear and to exempt the share from sale. But an "arrear of revenue" is defined by s. 2 of the Act, and there is nothing whatever in the Act to give support to the theory that subsequent tender by the defaulter of a sum which has once become an arrear has the effect of cancelling that arrear, so that it no longer exists. It is true that under s. 18 the Collector may for good reason exempt an estate or share of an estate from sale, and he would probably refuse to exercise this power, unless the sum in arrear was paid by the defaulter or by some other person. But in the present case it is clear upon the evidence that the Collector refused to exempt the share from sale and to treat the arrear as wiped out or cancelled. In their plaint the plaintiffs say that no order was passed on their application. The same statement was made in their petition of appeal to the Commissioner of the Division. On the 18th September the Collector's order was:—"No bid. Proceedings to be taken under s. 14." On the 23rd September Mr. Chardon, a zurpeshgidar under one of the plaintiffs, filed an application, asking the Collector to accept the tender or to allow him to pay up the arrear, and in that petition he stated: "Although that arrear with cesses was paid in by chalans by the joint proprietors, and an application was made for exemption from sale, still Your Honour upon returning the application gave the order: "Let [859] the khata and the ijmali be put together and notice under s. 14 of the sale law be given to the shareholders of the khata, so that they may pay up the arrear and retain the estate." On 1st October the plaintiff Dharu Lall made another application to the Collector, in which, after referring to the deposit and the formal application, he stated: "But as the aforesaid share had defaulted seven times within the last three years Your Honour verbally passed the order: There is no need of filing a petition, this share will in any case be sold by auction," and on that application the Collector made the following order:—"The share was properly put up for sale, as it defaulted seven times in twelve kists. It is beside the point that the petitioner or any one else has paid in the arrears after the estate has defaulted. When the ijmali share was put up for sale, no one bid, and accordingly I had no alternative but to buy it in for Government (which I did not think advisable) or to postpone the sale and take action under s. 14 of the Sale Act. This I did, and having done so, the law must take its course. I have no power to cancel my order. Application rejected."

From all this it is quite clear that the Collector refused to exempt the share from sale; the share was in arrear, and the arrear must be held to have been still due when the Collector proceeded in accordance with the provisions of s. 14 of the Act.

It is admitted both by the Subordinate Judge and at the bar here that under s. 6 of the Act no payment, or tender of payment, made on September 16th could bar or interfere with the sale unless there had been a specific order of exemption from sale under s. 18—Gobind Chandra Gangapadhya v. Sherajunessa Bibi (1) and Lala Gauri Shankar Lal v. Janki Pershad (2); but it is contended that in this case there was no such sale as is contemplated by s. 6 of the Act, and that the last clause of that section will not apply to a purchase by the other recorded sharers under s. 14; that no order of exemption in that case was necessary; and that there being at that time no arrear due, the purchase by the other sharers was illegal and invalid.

[860] I have already given my reasons for holding that the arrear was still due at the time of the purchase by the defendants, and I am of opinion that the tender and deposit of the arrear on September 16th did not invalidate the purchase by the defendants under s. 14. The proceedings under s. 14 were only taken because there was no bid for the share at the sale of September 18th. Had the share been sold then, it would have been admittedly a good sale, and s. 14 distinctly says that a sharer purchasing under that section "shall have the same rights as if the share had been purchased by him at the sale." The defendants therefore, by exercising the privilege allowed them by s. 14, were put in the same position as if they had purchased the share at the sale of September 18th, and, as that sale would admittedly have been a good sale in the absence of any order of exemption, the defendants must have acquired a good title by their purchase.

I must confess that I find myself unable to follow the reasoning of the Subordinate Judge or to understand why an arrear, which would have justified a sale of the share on the 18th September, and which presumably would have justified a sale of the whole estate had the arrear not been paid by the other sharers under s. 14, is nevertheless not such an arrear as would make the purchase by the sharers under that section a valid transaction. That purchase must be regarded as a part of the sale proceedings. There had been no bid for the share, and under the law the entire estate was liable to be sold, but as the other sharers were not to blame for the default the law mercifully allows them to save their property from the hammer by paying up the arrear due from the share in arrear, and the legal effect of such payment is the transfer of the share in arrear to the other sharers in the same way as if the share had been purchased by them at the sale.

On the second point I am also of opinion that the lower Court is wrong in holding that the defendants' purchase is invalid, because they did not pay the arrear within ten days from the date of sale, that is to say, September 18th. What s. 14 says is that if at the sale the highest offer for the share shall not equal the amount of arrear due thereupon to the date of sale, the Collector shall stop the sale and shall [861] declare that the entire estate will be put up to sale for arrears of revenue at a future date, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers, or one or more of them, shall within ten days purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from such share." Now, in the absence of any specific words to the contrary, the reasonable construction of this provision of the law is that the other sharers shall be allowed ten days' time within which to pay the amount of arrear and save their property from sale, and that the ten days shall count from the date on which notice of the Collector's order or declaration shall have been communicated to them. This reasonable construction of the law is incorporated in a circular order of the Board of Revenue which runs as follows: "When an entire estate, of which separate accounts have been opened, becomes liable to sale for arrears of revenue under this section, in consequence of the highest offer for the share exposed for sale being not equal to the amount of arrears due thereupon up to the date of sale, it shall be the duty of the Collector to publish in open Court a declaration that the entire estate will be put up for sale on a future date, unless the other recorded shareholders, or one or more of them, shall, within ten days from the date of the service of a notice on them, purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from such share, and the Collector shall also serve a notice to this effect on each of the other recorded shareholders of the estate. Board's Circular Order, dated 5th October 1884; see Grimley's Revenue Sale Manual, p. 44. It may therefore be presumed that this is the recognized usage in all Collectors' offices, and I think we may and ought to look at this usage as supplementing the law on this point. There is nothing in the law requiring the other sharers to be present at the sale of a share, and it would be altogether unreasonable that an order should be made for the sale of the entire estate without notice to them. It is admitted that notice was issued to the defendants in the present case, and it is not alleged that the arrear was not paid within ten days from the date of service of such notice. That being so, I think there is ample evidence on the record to show that the amount was so paid, and I am of opinion that that payment sufficiently complied with the requirements of the law.

[862] It has further been contended for the appellants that under s. 33 of the Act this point cannot be raised in the present suit inasmuch as it was not taken in the petition of appeal to the Commissioner. Having carefully considered that petition and the order of the Commissioner, I am satisfied that this ground was not "declared and specified" before him, and therefore on the authority of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Gobind Lal Roy v. Ramjanam Misser (1) it is not open to the plaintiffs to raise the point in the present suit. It may be that the case is a hard one and that the plaintiffs have suffered great loss in consequence of their default in paying the Government revenue. But that is not a consideration that ought to influence the Civil Courts in the administration of the law. All that the Court has to consider is whether the plaintiffs have succeeded in proving such legal defects in the defendants' title that their purchase ought to be set aside. The law itself in ss. 18 and 26 provides for relief in cases of hardship, but that is not a matter in which the Civil Courts are authorized to interfere.

I am of opinion that the appeal should be allowed, and that the plaintiffs' suit should be dismissed with costs in both Courts.

As however my learned colleague dissents from the view of the law taken by me, the papers must be laid before the Chief Justice in order that the case may be referred to a third Judge.

PETHERAM, C.J.—The facts of this case are so fully set out by the learned Judges who have differed that it is not necessary for me to state them again.

Section 3 of the Act provides that, if all arrears of revenue, etc., are not paid up to the date at which they are declared to be due, the estate in arrear shall be sold by auction to the highest bidder. Section 6 provides that "no payment, or tender of payment, made after sunset of the latest day for payment, shall bar or interfere with the sale, either at the time of sale or after its conclusion." Section 10 provides a machinery by which a share of an estate may, for certain purposes, be treated as a separate estate, and s. 13 provides that, when this has been done, such share shall be first offered for sale for its own arrears, and that the entire estate shall not be sold for the arrears of shares, unless at [863] the sale a sufficient amount to satisfy the arrears has not been obtained for the share. Section 14 provides for what is to be done with reference to the sale of the entire estate when the share has not been sold because a sufficient amount could not be obtained for it to satisfy its arrears. In that case the Collector must stop the sale, and declare that the entire estate will be put up for sale at a future date, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers, or one or more of them, shall within ten days purchase the share in arrear by paying to the Government the whole arrear due from it.

There can be no doubt that whether the sale is a sale of the share only under s. 13 or is a sale of the entire estate at a "future time," such as is contemplated by s. 14, it must always be a sale for default of payment of revenue under s. 3 and be subject to the provision of s. 6, and, consequently, no payment or tender can prevent a sale either of the share or of the entire estate unless made in time, or unless the Collector decides to exempt the estate or share from sale under the power given him in s. 18, and it is I think impossible to hold that the estate or share is in arrear for the purpose of bringing it to sale and is not in arrear for the purpose of enabling the Collector to act under the other provisions of s. 14, which are in fact regulations under which the power to sell the entire estate for the arrears of the share are to be exercised. This disposes of the first ground on which the suit has been decreed, and on that ground I think the appellant is entitled to succeed.

The next ground on which it is contended that this sale cannot be effective to pass the share to other sharers is that the arrear was not paid to the Government by them, until after the period of ten days from the day when the sale of the share was stopped by the Collector. Mr. Justice Ameer Ali thinks that, when that period had expired, all the rights of the other sharers, in the entire estate to stop the sale of their own property were at an end, as they are in conflict with those of the defaulting sharer, and he thinks the right of the defaulter must prevail over those of the sharers who are not in default at all. To test the soundness of this view I will try to consider the question from their point of view, and for this purpose will assume that the action is one which is brought by the owners of the shares, not in default, to set aside the sale of the [864] entire estate for an inadequate price at a sale, held after they had deposited the whole of the arrears, but at a time which was after the period of ten days had expired, but within ten days of the time when they had notice of what had taken place, and that they never in fact had any notice at all of the sale of their own property. If Mr. Justice Ameer Ali's view of the law is correct, their suit must fail, and they must lose their estate, however valuable it may be, for the inadequate price for which it was sold at a sale, of which they never heard, and they must do so because their rights are in conflict with those of their defaulting co-sharer whose rights in this view of the law was, at the expiration of an arbitrary period of ten days, to have the whole estate sold in order that he might get the best price for his share. The defaulter might have protected his share by payment at any time before sale of the revenue in arrear, but in addition to this he might have protected it on the very day of sale by himself purchasing it for the amount of the arrears; he must of necessity have known that his share would be offered for sale, because he must have known that he had not paid the revenue in time, and that the Collector had refused to exempt it from sale, and he would know that if a sum equal to the arrears were not offered, the sale would proceed.

I have myself examined the Act and have asked my colleagues and the gentlemen who have appeared in the case whether there is any provision in the Act which prevents the owner of a defaulting estate or share from himself bidding at the sale, and no such provision can be found, and it must follow that if he had been pleased to do so the defaulter might have attended the sale, and himself, as there were no bidders at all, have purchased the share for the amount of the arrears, which amount was already standing to his credit in the Collectorate, and so his estate would have been saved. I cannot think that the Legislature ever intended that the estate not in default should be sacrificed in the interest of a defaulter having such opportunities, and not caring to take advantage of them, without giving its owner some reasonable means of protecting himself, and that I think can only be done under this section, and this is the only section which gives him any protection at all, by reading it as Mr. Justice Beverley [865] has done, or by limiting the operation of so much of the section as prescribes a period of ten days to the power of the Collector to notify the entire estate for sale, but leaving him at liberty to sell it in the other way prescribed by the section at any time before the sale by public auction takes place, and this is the view which I am disposed to take.

But however that may be, I am of opinion that the ground cannot be relied on by the plaintiff in this action, as it was not declared and specified in his appeal to the Commissioner. Section 33 of the Act provides that "no sale for revenue or other demands, realizable in the same manner as arrears of revenue are realizable, shall be annulled by a Court of Justice, except on the ground of its having been made contrary to the provisions of the Act, and then only on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the irregularity complained of," and that "no such sale shall be annulled upon such ground unless the ground shall have been declared and specified in an appeal made to the Commissioner." In this case an appeal was made to the Commissioner, and the grounds of that appeal are upon this record; one of them states that the sale ought to be set aside, because the whole of the arrears had been deposited in the Collectorate on the 16th, but neither of them contains any reference to the period of ten days mentioned in s. 14, nor in any way complains that the sale to the defendants was made after that period had expired. There can be no doubt that the object of the suit is to annul the defendants' purchase from the Collector, and if that purchase was made in a sale for arrears of revenue, I think that the Civil Courts cannot annul it on this ground, as it certainly was not declared and specified in the appeal to the Commissioner. It is said that this section only applies to sales by public auction, and that the whole Act shows that this is the case, but I cannot agree in that view of the meaning of the section. The Act provides two modes in which a share of an estate may be sold for an arrear of revenue, one by public auction in the same way as that in which entire estates are sold, the other by private sale to the other sharers in the entire estate, after the share has been offered for sale by public auction, and at a higher price than the highest bid obtained for it. It is quite true that most of the references to sales in the Act appear to be to sales by [866] public auction, and the remarks of the Judicial Committee in the case which has been cited before us have the same tendency, but I am quite unable to understand how it can be possible for us to refuse to give effect to such plain words as those used here for such a reason. The words used are "no sale, &c., shall be annulled, &c." and they are as general as it was possible for the Legislature to make them, and I do not think we should be justified in restraining their operation to sales conducted in one way only, when in their ordinary meaning, they include all sales made for this purpose, in any way contemplated by law.

This disposes of the second ground on which the suit has been decreed, and on that ground too I think the appellants are entitled to succeed. I agree with Mr. Justice Beverley that the appeal must be allowed, and the suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

TAQUI JAN, MINOR, BY HIS MOTHER BANU BEGUM (Plaintiff) v.
OBAIDULLA alias NANHE NAWAB (Defendant).^{*} [10th May, 1894.]

Minor—Suit on behalf of a person alleged to be but not in fact a minor—Procedure to be adopted when suit is instituted on behalf of an alleged minor who is not so in fact.

When a suit is instituted by a person alleging himself to be a minor, and the suit is brought through a next friend, and when it is found that the plaintiff was not at the date of the institution of the suit in fact a minor, the Court should not dismiss the suit, as the defendant can be fully indemnified by the payment of his costs. In such a case the proper remedy is for the defendant to apply to have the plaint taken off the file or amended, and if it be not amended the next friend's name may be treated as mere surplusage and the suit be allowed to proceed.

THE facts of this case were as follows: One Mussamut Zaibunissa, sister of the plaintiff, was married to the defendant on the 30th June 1885. She died on the 5th December 1889, and the plaintiff Taqui Jan instituted this suit as a minor through his mother and guardian Mussamut Banu Begum claiming a one-sixth share of the dower of the deceased, on the ground that he, [867] Mussamut Banu Begum, and the defendant, the husband of the deceased, were her only heirs. His case was that the amount of dower fixed on the marriage of the defendant with his sister was one lakh of rupees and one gold mohur. The defendant in his written statement alleged that the plaintiff was not a minor at the time the plaint was filed, and denied that he was an heir of the deceased, who, the defendant stated, had left a son who died on the 9th June 1890. The defendant further denied that the amount of dower as alleged in the plaint was correct, and stated that whatever dower was due to the deceased from the defendant was remitted by her during her lifetime.

The suit was instituted on the 11th April 1891 in the third Subordinate Judge's Court, at Patna, and was subsequently transferred to the Court of the second Subordinate Judge. Six issues were framed, one of which related to the questions as to whether the plaintiff was or was not a minor at the time the suit was instituted, and, if not a minor, whether the suit as instituted could be maintained. The other issues related to the question of the plaintiff's heirship, the amount of the dower, and whether the sum had been remitted by Zaibunissa as alleged by the defendant.

Evidence was taken at the hearing upon all the issues, but the Subordinate Judge considered it unnecessary to determine any other than that relating to the plaintiff's minority. He came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was proved to have been of full age at the date of the institution of the suit, and held that the suit could not be maintained and accordingly dismissed it with costs.

The plaintiff appealed.

Babu Saligram Singh and Babu Bhoobun Mohan Biswas, for the appellant.

Moulvi Mahomed Yusoof and Moulvi Mahomed Isfak, for the respondent.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and AMEER ALI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This suit was brought on behalf of a person who was alleged to be a minor. The defendant in his written statement contended that the plaintiff was not a minor but in reality had attained his full age. The learned Judge in the Court below tried only the issue as to whether the defendant's plea was true, viz., that the [868] plaintiff was not a minor; and on finding against the plaintiff on that issue dismissed the whole suit. We have not gone into the question whether as a matter of fact the plaintiff was a minor, as having regard to the view which we take as to what course the learned Judge ought to have adopted the learned pleader for the appellant has not contested that finding. We think that the proper penalty for this mistake on the part of the plaintiff, if it was a mistake, ought not to be the loss of the whole suit but the payment of such costs as would properly indemnify the other side. The proper course to be pursued, where the opposite party contends that a plaintiff who is alleged to be a minor is really an adult, is that the defendant apply that the plaintiff be taken off the file or be amended. If it be not amended the next friend's name may be treated as mere surplusage and the suit be allowed to proceed.

We think it quite clear that the learned Judge having found that the plaintiff was not a minor ought to have given him an opportunity of electing whether he should proceed with the suit himself. No such opportunity was given, and the suit was dismissed. If we were to uphold this decision the result would be, the suit being now barred by limitation, that the plaintiff, because of this error, whether intentional or not, would lose the whole of his cause of action. We therefore set aside the decree of the Court below, and we give the plaintiff leave to amend the plaint and to make such alterations in it as are now necessary in consequence of its now being found that he is a major. We think, however, that it is clear that the defendant is entitled to have all the costs he has incurred up to this date. We accordingly leave untouched the decree of the Court below so far as it orders payment of costs to him, and we also direct that the appellant pay to the respondent his costs in this Court; and as the case has not been heard on the merits but disposed of on a preliminary issue we fix the pleader's fee at five gold mohurs. These sums, viz., the costs in the Court below and in this Court, must be paid within one month from the date on which the record shall arrive in the lower Court, and if so paid the suit will then be tried on its merits. If they be not so paid this appeal will stand dismissed with costs. The record will be sent down at once.

SITANATH PANDA (Plaintiff) v. PELARAM TRIPATI AND OTHERS
(Defendants.)* [6th June, 1894.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 22, cl. 2—Transfer of occupancy right and purchase by some of several co-sharer-landlords—Merger—Right of other co-sharer landlords to rent.

The acquisition of an occupancy right by a proprietor does not, under sub-s. (2) of s. 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, affect the right of a co-sharer landlord to receive his share of the rent of the tenancy. The "third person" mentioned in that sub-section includes every person interested other than the transferor and transferee.

[F., 32 C. 386 (F.B.) = 1 C.L.J. 1 = 9 C.W.N. 249; R., 24 C. 143 (148); 7 C.L.J. 512; 14 C.P.L.R. 9 (11).]

THE facts of this case are sufficiently stated in the judgment appealed from, which was as follows:—

"The plaintiff as shebait having a four annas share in the debutter mehal of an idol Kamesvar Jee, sued the defendants 1 to 4 for arrears of rent for the years 1297 to 1299 in respect of a jote, originally held by Kanai Dolui and others, but purchased by defendants 1 to 3 in the name of defendant 4 in execution of a rent decree obtained against them by one of the plaintiff's co-sharers.

"The defendants 1 to 3 who are the plaintiff's co-sharers in the debutter mehal deny the alleged purchase, and deny the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and themselves. Defendant 4 supports the plaintiff's case.

"The lower Court found the plaintiff's claim proved, and gave him a decree, and against this decree the defendants 1 to 3 appeal.

"It is urged in appeal that there is no evidence that these defendants are in possession of the jote as auction-purchasers; and that, assuming the plaintiff's case to be true, the defendants being proprietors of the mehal like the plaintiff, the occupancy jote, even if purchased by them, must be supposed to be merged in the superior title, and the plaintiff's claim should have been dismissed.

"With reference to the first point, this Court has no reason to interfere with the lower Court's finding. It is satisfactorily [870] proved by the other co-sharers of the mehal, one of whom, Gobind Prosad, is a common relation of both plaintiff and defendants, that defendants 1 to 3 did purchase the jote at a sale for arrears of rent, and are in possession of it, and that defendant 4, a creature of those defendants, is their benamidar—a fact admitted by defendant 4 himself.

"As regards the second point, this Court observes that defendants 1 to 3 being proved to be in possession of the jote as ryots, the said jote must be presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, and as between the plaintiff and themselves, to be their occupancy holding under s. 20, sub-s. (7) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Then, again, the defendants 1 to 3 being admittedly joint proprietors of the mehal with the plaintiff, the occupancy jote purchased by them must be supposed to have merged in their superior rights as proprietors under s. 22, sub-s. (2) of the Tenancy Act, and no rents can be claimed by the plaintiffs from them on account of it.

"The appeal is decreed, and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed; but each party will bear his costs of both Courts under the circumstances of the case."

The plaintiff appealed from this decision, mainly on the grounds that the Court had misapprehended the meaning of s. 22, sub-s. (2), of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that as between the plaintiff and defendants 1 to 3 the Court should have held that, though there was a merger, that did not affect the plaintiff's right to realize rent from the defendants.

Babu Boidonath Dutt, for the appellant.

Babu Nogendro Nath Mitter, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (BEVERLEY and GORDON, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

In this case the plaintiff sued for a four-anna share of the rent of a certain jote on the allegation that the jote in question had been purchased by the defendants 1 to 3 in the name of defendant No. 4. The defendants 1 to 3, who are co-sharers in the mouza with the plaintiff, deny the purchase of the jote. The defendant No. 4 in his written statement alleged that the defendants 2 and 3 had purchased the jote, benami, in his name, and that defendants 2 and 3 were in possession.

[871] The first Court found that the defendants 1 and 2 had purchased the jote in the name of defendant No. 4, and were in possession of the jote, and decreed the suit against the defendants 1 to 4. This decree was reversed by the Subordinate Judge on the ground that under s. 20, sub. s. (7) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the defendants must be presumed to be ryots with a right of occupancy, and therefore under s. 22, sub-s. (2), the right had merged in their superior right as proprietors, and that no rent could be claimed by the plaintiff therefor, and he accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

It is contended in second appeal that the lower appellate Court is wrong in law in its interpretation of ss. 20 and 22 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in reply to that the respondent has endeavoured to support the decree of the lower appellate Court by showing that there is no legal evidence of the purchase of the jote by the defendants and of their possession in pursuance of it.

We think it is impossible to say that there is absolutely no evidence of the purchase, although in our opinion that evidence is extremely slight, and had we to decide the point upon the evidence, we might have come to a different conclusion, but there being some sort of evidence, the lower Courts were justified in finding as a fact that the defendants had purchased the jote, and we cannot interfere with that finding of fact.

Then as regards the other point raised by the appellant, it appears to us that, whether or not the jote was an occupancy holding, s. 22, sub-s. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not operate to prevent the landlord from recovering the rent of the holding. Sub-section (2) runs as follows: "If the occupancy right in land is transferred to a person jointly interested in the land as proprietor or permanent tenure-holder, it shall cease to exist; but nothing in this sub-section shall prejudicially affect the rights of any third person." That is to say, the occupancy right will cease to exist, but it does not follow that the tenancy will be altogether extinguished. The third person mentioned in the clause must be held to include every person interested other than the transferor and transferee. So that the acquisition of an occupancy right by a proprietor would not affect the right of a co-sharer landlord to receive his share of the rent of the tenancy.

[872] That being so, the decree of the lower appellate Court must be reversed, and that of the first Court restored with costs in both the appellate Courts. The finding of appellate Court being that the defendants 1 to 3 purchased the jots the decree will be against them, and the suit will be dismissed as against defendant No. 4.

SHAM CHARAN MAL (Plaintiff) v. CHOWDHRY DEBYA SINGH PAHRAJ, MINOR, BY HIS GUARDIAN CHOWDHRY SHAM SUNDER ROY (Defendant).^{*} [26th June, 1894.]

Minor—Necessaries—Bond, registered executed by minor—Registration of bond by minor—Limitation to suit against a minor on a registered bond executed by him for necessities—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 68—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 35.

On the 20th April 1886 a sum of money was advanced by A., to a minor who executed a bond in respect thereof and duly registered the same. The money was required by the minor to provide for his defence in certain criminal proceedings then pending against him on a charge of dacoity and was used by him for that purpose. On the 18th June 1892, A, instituted a suit against the minor for the amount due on the bond. It was urged on behalf of the minor, who had not attained majority at the time the suit was filed, that he was not liable to A., for the amount advanced; that it was not advanced for "necessaries;" that he was not liable under the bond, and that the fact of it being registered could not help the plaintiff, and consequently, even assuming that the money was required for "necessaries," the suit was barred by limitation being brought more than three years after the advance was made.

Held, that the liberty of the minor being at stake, the money advanced must be taken to have been borrowed for necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act.

Held, further, that there being nothing to show that the minor appeared to be such to the Registrar at the time of registration so as to enable the Registrar to refuse registration under s. 35 of the Registration Act, and the concealment of the fact of the executant's minority both by himself and by the plaintiff from the Registrar not amounting to fraud so as [873] to invalidate the registration proceedings as against the minor, the Registrar had in no way violated the law relating to the registration of documents, and the bond must be taken to have been duly registered.

Held, also, that in such a case the bond could not be ignored and treated as non-existent, being the basis of the suit, and that on its being proved to have been executed by the minor in respect of money advanced for necessities, effect must be given to the fact of registration and the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree.

the 20th April 1886. He alleged that the defendants were being prosecuted for dacoity and that the money was borrowed for the purpose of their defence. Chowdry Debya Singh Pahraj, who was sued as a minor, was, the plaintiff admitted, a minor at the time he executed the bond, but it was alleged that his mother and certificated guardian, who had since died, had admitted the amount to be justly due from the minor under the bond, and that the money had been borrowed for the benefit of the minor and for necessities.

This suit was only contested on behalf of the minor and one other of the defendants. The latter pleaded that the money was borrowed for the minor, and contended that he was not liable, though he admitted the execution of the bond. The Subordinate Judge held that he was liable and no appeal was preferred against that decision.

On behalf of the minor it was contended that he could not be liable under the bond; that the whole amount of the money borrowed was not required for the purpose of the defence and that the suit was barred by limitation.

The execution of the bond by the minor was admitted at the hearing, and the Subordinate Judge found that there was ample evidence to show that the money advanced on the bond was paid before the Registrar and advanced to the infant for the purpose of his defence in the criminal proceedings; that the money was not taken by the infant's guardian, and that there was no evidence to show that the plaintiff was aware of the guardianship at the time the advance was made. He further held that money was undoubtedly used for the purpose of the defence, and that it was quite unnecessary for the [874] plaintiff to prove that the whole of the amount advanced was so used. It was urged before the Subordinate Judge that a contract made by a minor was void under the Contract Act and not merely voidable and he was referred to Addison on Contracts, pp. 15, 1024 and 1028; Story on Contracts, pp. 131-138; Pollock on Contracts, pp. 32-34; Bykuntath Roy Chowdhry v. Pogose (1) and Watkins v. Dhunoo Baboo (2); but the Subordinate Judge held that such contracts were not void under the Act, and quoted Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debya (3) as an authority for that proposition, and came to the conclusion that the contract was binding on the minor under s. 68 of the Contract Act, the advance having been made for necessities.

On the question of limitation the material portion of the Subordinate Judge's judgment was as follows:—

"It appears that the plaint was filed after the expiration of three years but within six years from the date when the loan was payable. The bond apparently is a contract in writing registered within the meaning of art. 116, sch. II of the Limitation Act, which prescribes six years as the period within which a suit based on it is to be instituted. It is contended, however, on behalf of the defendant No. 1 that as he was a minor when the bond was registered the registration was null and void, and therefore the bond was not a registered document to which art. 116 would apply. To determine the legal sufficiency of the contention it is necessary to examine the law and authorities in detail. I should premise at the outset that art. 116 does not turn upon the validity or otherwise of the registration of the contract therein referred to. It speaks of a contract which professes to have been registered, and the bond is on the face of it a registered contract. Regard being had therefore to the frame of the article, the question now raised would not be an open one for the purpose of deciding the plea of limitation.

"Turning to the Registration Act I find there is nothing to support the defendant's position. Under s. 35 of that Act the registering officer 'shall refuse to register the document if the executant thereof appears to be a minor.' The necessary corollary from the above would be that if the executant does not appear to be a minor the registering officer shall register the document. Now there are no materials before me to show how defendant No. 1 appeared to the Sub-Registrar at the time of the registration of the document, and it is an open question if a Civil Court can exercise revisional jurisdiction over the Sub-Registrar's proceedings in the matter of that appearance for testing the validity of the registration of an instrument. No such jurisdiction is conferred on the Civil Court [875] by the Act. The Act nowhere provides for an appeal against an order or proceeding admitting an instrument to registration. It is in case of refusal to register that an appeal or civil suit is prescribed as a remedial measure. Further, the Act does not lay down any procedure as to how the question of minority may be disposed of under s. 35. No quasi-judicial enquiry is prescribed, and therefore it cannot be said that in the present case the Sub-Registrar has acted in excess of his legitimate jurisdiction. That being so it is impossible to predicate of his proceeding as being illegal or irregular. This is a case where the registration certificate should carry with it its special finality, and it is not for the Civil Court to question it: Sheo Shunkur Sahoy v. Hirdey Narain Sahu (1), Husaini Begam v. Mulo (2). That certificate merely publishes the registered document to the world leaving its factum and validity open to contest at the instance of a party interested therein. The cases quoted on defendant's side do not establish the position contended for. In Beni Madhab Mitter v. Khatir Mondul (3) and Baij Nath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagut (4) the question hinged on the Sub-Registrar's territorial jurisdiction which does not arise in this case. Muhammad Ewaz v. Birj Lal (5) is wholly distinguishable. There out of three persons whose names appeared on the document as executants two admitted execution before the Sub-Registrar and the Judicial Committee held that against the absentee registration of the document was bad.

"In Husaini Begam v. Mulo (2) there was no admission of execution of the bond on behalf of the minor, and the case was decided in accordance with the principles laid down by the Judicial Committee above mentioned.

"In connection with this point the plea of fraud is raised. It is urged that as plaintiff caused the registration of the bond by representing that defendant No. 1 was an adult, when plaintiff knew the defendant was not so, it was a fraudulent representation, and therefore the registration was void. Now it is true that plaintiff was aware of the executant's minority at the date of registration, but there is nothing to show that he was present before the registering officer at the time and made any representation at all. He might have suffered defendant No. 1 to pass as an adult, and if there was a passive fraud on plaintiff's part, defendant No. 1 chose to play an actively fraudulent part. There was certainly a league between them to defraud the Sub-Registrar, but it cannot be contended that thereby plaintiff has committed a fraud on defendant No. 1. The learned Vakil for the defence referred me to the definition of fraud in s. 17 of the Contract Act. That definition abundantly shows that it is no fraud unless committed by a "party" to deceive "another party," and the Sub-Registrar was certainly not a "party" within the meaning of the definition. I would accordingly hold that the suit is not barred by limitation."

[876] The Subordinate Judge accordingly gave the plaintiff a decree for the amount due on the bond against all the defendants.

Defendant No. 1, the minor, appealed to the District Judge who reversed the decision of the lower Court as against the appellant. The material portion of his judgment was as follows:—

"The first question that arises in this case refers to the liability of the minor and the extent of that liability. Under ss. 10 and 11 of the Contract Act, a minor is incompetent to enter into any contract, and his liability could arise only under circumstances covered by s. 68 of that Act. But it has been held more than once by the Calcutta High Court that Act IX of 1872 effected no change in the law of contracts as regards minors whose liabilities must continue to be governed by the English law on the subject. It is enough to refer to the recently reported case of Mahamed Arif v. Saraswati Debya (1). The contract thus being not void but voidable, the appellant says: 'I repudiate the contract and wish to avoid it.' To this the plaintiff replies that the money was lent for a necessary purpose, and although irrespective of the bond the appellant would be liable to repay it by the common law and also under s. 68 of the Contract Act, he cannot resist this suit and evade payment merely because he also executed a bond. This argument is valid, and it has been so held by the Court of Queen's Bench in Walter v. Everard (2). The lower Court has found, and that finding has not been attacked in appeal, that the loan was taken for a necessary purpose, viz., to pay the expenses of a criminal case in which all the four defendants were accused persons and in which three of them, including the minor, were committed to the Sessions on charges of dacoity, etc., of which they were acquitted. I hold that there was a legal necessity.

"If, therefore, the deed was a single bond executed by the minor alone for necessaries, the case would present no difficulties. But the bond in this case is a joint one, and is a registered document. Hence questions relating to joint liability and limitation arise, the latter depending on the validity of the registration.

"In the case of Walter v. Everard cited above, Lord Esher said in his judgment: 'It comes in the result to this—that a bond given by an infant for the price of necessaries does not prevent the obligee from recovering that price from him, if the bond is a single one, and it is not relied on simply as a bond. In the same way an infant can be sued upon a covenant by deed for the price of necessaries, but the case must be treated just as if there had been no deed. The Court must enquire whether the things in question were in fact supplied to the infant, and whether, according to the ordinary rule, that which was supplied was necessary. The Court must do exactly what it would do if there were no deed and what it certainly would not do in the case of an ordinary deed not given by an infant.'

[877] "Now, if, in accordance with the principle so clearly and forcibly laid down above, we deal with the present case 'as if there had been no deed' the suit must be held to have been barred by the three years' rule of limitation as against the minor under art. 66 and 57 of the schedule to the Limitation Act. Also if we deal with the case as if there was no bond, it is extremely doubtful if the minor can be cast in joint liability with the other defendants. In Addison on Contracts (6th edition, page 1,055,) it is stated: 'If one of several joint contractors was an infant at the time of making the contract, and has not, since the attainment of his majority and before commencement of the action, ratified the contract, he ought not to be made a defendant with his co-contractors.' Authorities are cited in support of this proposition, but I am unable to say if in any of the cases cited the contract was for necessities. It is urged emphatically on behalf of the appellant that if he be held liable only for the supply of necessities, his liability should in equity be limited by the extent of his necessity; and that the plaintiff not having given any evidence of the extent of the necessity, his suit as against the minor should be dismissed, or at the best the minor should be charged only with a fourth part of the total amount claimed.

"I am disposed to hold that, if a suit against the minor jointly with the other defendants would lie in this case, the decree should also be joint, and I am, therefore, not prepared on this ground to disturb the judgment of the lower Court.

"Upon the question of limitation, however, I feel myself compelled to differ from the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. In my opinion, the plaintiff in this case is not entitled, as against the minor, to the extended period of six years allowed to holders of registered bonds under art. 116 of the Limitation Act as interpreted in Nobocoomar Mookhopadhyaya v. Siru Mullick (1).

"It is after a careful consideration of the authorities, though not without some hesitation, that I have arrived at this conclusion, and I have done so on two grounds: Firstly, because the bond could not be enforced against the minor, except on the ground of necessities, and the learned Judges of the Queen's Bench have held not that the bond is valid as a bond, but that 'it did not prevent the minor from being liable for the amount claimed' in the same manner 'as if there had been no deed.' 'The Court must do exactly what it would do if there were no deed.' In other words, the Court must dismiss the suit as barred by limitation against the minor.

"My second ground is that the registration of the bond was no registration as against the minor within the meaning of the definition of the word 'registered' given in s. 3 of the Limitation Act.

"Section 35 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) directs that where any of the executants to a deed appear to the registering officer to be a minor registration in regard to the minor should be refused. In the present case [878] the lower Court has held, and I also hold, that both parties were aware of the minority of the appellant. The Subordinate Judge has found that 'there was certainly a league between them to defraud the Sub-Registrar, but it cannot be contended that thereby plaintiff has committed an act of fraud on defendant No. 1.' No; but it seems to me equally certain that a document, the registration of which was obtained by fraud practised on the registering officer, cannot be considered to have been 'duly registered' under the provisions of the Registration Act, or within the meaning of the Limitation Act. But apart from fraud, I consider that registration of a document executed admittedly by a minor is no registration as against him, for a minor is incompetent to admit execution before the registering officer, and that officer has no jurisdiction to record a minor's admission. This is not a case where a minor, by falsely representing himself to be of age, induces another person to enter into a contract with him. For in that case, even by the common law of England, the minor would be estopped from pleading minority afterwards. In the Full Bench case of Baij Nath Tewari v. Sheo Sahoy Bhagut (1) even an imperfect compliance with the provisions of s. 21 of the Registration Act was held to invalidate the registration. Much more so ought to be, I think, the case where one of the parties admitting execution was admittedly a minor at the time. It is unnecessary for me to discuss the other authorities cited on this point, because none of them bear on the question of minority, or other similar disability. I hold that no legal incidents can attach to registration by a minor, and that the Civil Court should not give effect to such registration.

"For these reasons I hold that the suit as against the minor appellant was time barred."

The District Judge accordingly dismissed the suit as against the minor defendant, and against that decision the plaintiff now appealed to the High Court.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee and Babu Umakali Mukerjee, for the appellant.

Babu Nil Madhub Bose and Babu Monmohan Dutt, for the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

This was a suit to recover a certain sum of money on a registered bond, dated the 20th April 1886, executed by the four defendants in favour of the plaintiff. At the time of the execution of the bond and of the institution of the suit, the defendant No. 1 was a minor, and the plaintiff's case against him was that he borrowed the money covered by the bond for [879] necessities, that is to say, for the purpose of defraying expenses incurred in defending him in a prosecution for dacoity, before the Criminal Courts. This defendant, through his guardian ad litem, denied his liability under the bond, and he also pleaded limitation. The Subordinate Judge decreed the claim against all the defendants. He found that the minor defendant borrowed the money for necessities, as alleged by the plaintiff, and relying on s. 68 of the Contract Act, and on certain authorities cited in his judgment, he held that the bond was good and valid as against the minor. On the question of limitation the Subordinate Judge was of opinion that, notwithstanding the fact that defendant No. 1 was a minor when he admitted execution before the registering officer, the bond was duly registered under the Registration Act, and that, therefore, under art. 116, sch. II of the Limitation Act, the suit having been brought less than six (though more than three) years after the due date was within time. And as regards the plea of fraud in the registering officer, which appears to have been raised before him at the trial, the Subordinate Judge held that, although there was certainly a league between the plaintiff and the minor defendant to defraud the Sub-Registrar, still "it cannot be contended that thereby the plaintiff has committed an act of fraud on defendant No. 1. The learned vakil for the defence referred me to the definition of fraud in s. 17 of the Contract Act. That definition abundantly shows that it is no fraud unless committed by a party, and the Sub-Registrar was certainly not a party within the meaning of the definition." On appeal by the minor defendant the District Judge has reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit as against him. He agrees with the Subordinate Judge that the minor defendant borrowed the money on the bond for necessities, and he holds therefore on the authority of the case Walter v. Everard (1) that he is liable. But as regards limitation he finds that the suit is barred. Relying upon certain passages in the judgment of Lord Esher in the case Walter v. Everard the learned District Judge is of opinion that the present suit should be dealt with as if there were no bond at all, and that therefore the suit, having been instituted more than three years after the [880] due date of payment, is barred. And on the question of registration of the bond the learned Judge observes: "Registration of a document executed admittedly by a minor is no registration as against him, for a minor is incompetent to admit execution before the registering officer, and that officer has no jurisdiction to record a minor's admission." Against this decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court and his learned counsel has contended before us that the District Judge has taken an erroneous view of the questions of limitation and registration, while the learned vakil for the respondent has argued in support of the judgment of the District Judge on the ground decided against him, that the contract was not for necessities within the proper meaning of the term, and that therefore it is not binding on the minor. We think, however, that this latter contention is not correct. The liberty of the minor was in jeopardy. There was a charge of dacoity impending over him in the Criminal Courts, and in order to defend him and to save him from punishment and incarceration in jail it was necessary to raise funds for legal advice and assistance. Pleaders were employed to defend him, and the money borrowed under the bond was paid to them as remuneration. In these circumstances, we think it may fairly and reasonably be said that the money was borrowed for necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act, and that the minor is accordingly liable on the contract. As an authority for the view we take we may refer to the decision of Mr. Justice Broughton in Watkins v. Dhunnoo Baboo (2) in which that learned Judge held that a minor is liable for costs incurred in successfully defending a suit in which his property was in jeopardy, and that such costs are recoverable from him as if they were necessities. Whether the principle which underlies that decision can be supported in its entirety, it is not necessary to discuss in this case. It is sufficient to say that the liberty of the minor being at stake, we think the money should be taken to have been borrowed for necessities.

Then as to the plaintiff's appeal we think it must succeed. We think the learned District Judge is in error in holding that the present suit should be treated as if there were [881] no bond at all, and that it is accordingly barred, and further that on this point he has not rightly construed the judgment of Lord Esher in the case of Walter v. Everard, to which we have already referred. That suit was brought on a covenant under seal, in which a consideration is implied, and Lord Esher in his judgment says: "It is not true that you can sue an infant upon a bond given by him for the price of necessities supplied to him, with all the ordinary incidents of such an action. The plaintiff cannot simply put in the bond against the infant, and say that bond is under your seal, and there can be no inquiry into the consideration given for it." And further on in his judgment the same learned Judge observes: "You cannot sue the infant upon his bond as a bond. But if the bond is what is called a single bond, that is, if it is given only for the reasonable price of necessities supplied to the infant, and there is no penalty, the infant can be sued upon it." We think that the principle thus enunciated when applied to the present case means this—that before the minor defendant could be fixed with liability it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove not only the execution of the bond by him, but also that he borrowed the money covered by it for necessities; in other words, it was incumbent on the plaintiff to establish this fact as if there were no bond at all, and in this sense we think the suit must be treated as Lord Esher observes: "Just as if there had been no deed." The bond cannot be ignored and treated as non-existent, because it is the basis of the suit, and it has been proved to have been executed by the defendant. On the question of registration also we are unable to agree with the District Judge. The point for determination is whether the bond has been duly registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act, and we are of opinion that it has. Section 35 of the Act provides: "If any such person (by whom the document purports to be executed) appears to the registering officer to be a minor * * * the registering officer shall refuse to register the document as to the person so appearing." In the present case the defendant No. 1 appeared before the Registrar and admitted execution of the bond, and the document was accordingly registered. We may well assume that before the registering officer registered [882] it, he was satisfied in his own mind (at any rate it did not appear to him to be otherwise) that the defendant No. 1 was not a minor, and by so registering, we are unable to say that he has in any way violated the law relating to the registration of documents. That law nowhere lays down that registration of a document, execution of which is admitted by a minor, is ipso facto void as against such minor, or void for want of jurisdiction on the part of the registering officer. No doubt deception appears to have been practised on the registering officer by the plaintiff and the minor by concealing from him the fact of the minority of the latter, but that, in our opinion, does not amount to fraud in the proper sense of the term, so as to invalidate the registration proceedings as against the minor defendant. In this view we think that the suit is not barred, it having been instituted within six years from the due date of the bond.

We accordingly decree the appeal, and restore the decree of the Subordinate Judge with costs.

PRESENT :

Lord Hobhouse, Lord Ashbourne, Lord Macnaghten and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma.]

KADER MOIDEEN (Plaintiff) v. C. W. NEPEAN AND OTHERS
(Defendants). [19th and 20th April and 9th June, 1894.]

Mortgage—Form of Mortgage—Sale—Construction whether lands had been sold or mortgaged—Evidence—Documents explained by parol—Waste land grants—Usufructuary mortgage.

Waste lands, granted in 1870, were transferred by the grantee in 1871 to his creditor, since deceased, from whose representatives in 1891 he claimed redemption, alleging that the transfer had been made upon a mortgage with possession. The grantee had previously, in 1870, mortgaged the lands to this creditor to secure advances taken for part payment of the purchase-money. In 1871 they arranged that the creditor should advance the entire balance, and they jointly petitioned for an entry to be made, in the register of waste land grants, that the ownership had been transferred from the one to the other of them. This entry was made, and endorsements to the same effect were made on the documents of grant.

[883] On the question whether the transaction was a mortgage, or a sale as the defendants alleged it to be, general evidence was given, in addition to the documentary; and among the facts in favour of the plaintiff was that the creditor had retained uncanceled, till his death, all acknowledgments for the money advanced by him in the transaction. Although, under other circumstances, and on the documents alone, the inference might have been that there had been a sale for some undisclosed consideration, yet, on the true construction of the joint petition, and the orders made thereon, the proper conclusion was that the entry and the endorsements were intended only as a record of the arrangement proposed by the parties, and sanctioned by the registering officer. The intention was not to have an absolute sale. The transaction was held to be a mortgage which the plaintiff was entitled to redeem.

APPEAL from a decree (28th September 1892) of the Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma, affirming a decree (18th July 1892) of the Commissioner of the Tenasserim division, who reversed a decree (16th May 1892) of the District Judge of Shwegyin.

This suit was brought on the 4th December 1891 by the appellant, Kader Moideen, a contractor of Toungoo, against C. W. Nepean and three others, now the respondents, who represented John Nepean, deceased in 1883. The plaintiff claimed redemption upon accounts to be taken of three allotments of land in the Shwegyin district, comprising 4,524 acres, granted to him by the Government under the waste land rules in 1870, and alleged by him to have been mortgaged to John Nepean in 1871.

The plaint stated that, after acquiring the three allotments, the plaintiff, on the 6th June 1870, mortgaged them to John Nepean to secure advances made by the latter for payment of the instalments due to the Government for the purchase-money. and that afterwards, in 1871, in order to complete payment, he agreed that John Nepean, who without further security would lend no more, should have possession of the lands allotted, the mortgage continuing, and should appropriate the profits towards payment of the principal and interest on arrears then due, till the whole amount should have been recovered by the mortgagee; and that, to carry out this arrangement, a transfer should be entered in the register of waste land grants to John Nepean: that on the 3rd June 1871 this entry was duly effected, the mortgage of 6th June 1870 remaining with John Nepean, who paid on account of [884] the plaintiff the principal, Rs. 7,158, and interest Rs. 639: that the rents and profits of the land had paid these sums off, and had left a balance of about Rs. 3,000, due by the defendants, the present holders of the land, to the plaintiff, who had demanded, and had been refused, an account.

The first and second defendants, by their written statement, admitted the mortgage of 6th June 1870, and added: "About two days before the lands would have been forfeited for default in payment of the purchase-money and interest thereon, the plaintiff requested John Nepean, who, with the concurrence of the Revenue officer, agreed to the request, to accept an absolute and unconditional transfer to him of the interest of the plaintiff in the lands, and in consideration thereof to cancel the mortgage of 1870, to release the plaintiff from his covenant to repay the Rs. 3,000 and interest secured thereby, and other debts, and to pay and indemnify the plaintiff from all liability for the balance of the purchase-money and the interest due thereon. This transfer was carried into effect by the Revenue officer; the unconditional transfer of the lands to John Nepean was registered according to the rules; and he was put into possession of the lands by order. This was effected on the 3rd July 1871, and the mortgage-deed, as a document of title being in the mortgagee's hands with the other documents of title, remained with him as the owner; but the defendants deny that it so remained with him as evidence of the transaction alleged by the plaintiff."

The Revenue officer was the Deputy Commissioner. The words entered in the register, and endorsed on the grants, and all the facts of the case, are stated in their Lordships' judgment.

The principal issue was the following: "Was the transfer of Kader Moideen's land to John Nepean on the 3rd June 1871, which was registered and accompanied by possession, an absolute transfer, or was it a mortgage?"

The District Judge, to decide this, considered whether he must confine himself to the entry in the waste lands register, and the three grants only, or whether he was at liberty to look at all the surrounding circumstances, the mortgage of 1870, the joint petition [885] and other documents, and the conduct of the parties. He proceeded upon evidence given of all the above. He found that the transfer of 3rd June 1871 was not a transfer by way of sale, but that there was a contract between the parties, which was a usufructuary mortgage; and he decided that the plaintiff had a right of redemption, limited only by art. 148 of the second schedule of the Limitation Act, 1877, fixing sixty years as the limit of time. His decree directed that accounts be taken of all the rents and profits received by the defendants, or their predecessor in title, since the 3rd June 1871, of all debts due to them from the plaintiff, of all money expended by them in paying Government dues on these lands, and in managing and improving them, and of the value of all improvements.

On an appeal by the defendants this decision was reversed. The Commissioner was of opinion that oral evidence to alter, vary, or control the written evidence was inadmissible. The written evidence was contained in the joint petition, in the endorsements on the deeds of grant, and in the entries in the register. If this was all the admissible evidence, and he was of opinion that it was all that was legally before the Court, there could, he added, be no reasonable doubt that the transaction was a sale. The application was for a substitution of names; the entry in the register and the endorsements on the documents of grant described what was transferred as "ownership," and John Nepean was described as the "new holder." This judgment was affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner, who was also of opinion that the oral evidence taken by the District Judge was inadmissible.

It was true, he considered, that all the terms of the contract had not been reduced to writing: and, had s. 91 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, dealt only with contracts, it might have been open to the appellant to prove that there were other terms and what those were, but that section dealt also with "grants and other dispositions of property;" and as, in his opinion, the endorsements on the original grants were clear grants or dispositions of property, so it followed that parol evidence was not admissible to affect them. With regard to the entry made on the 3rd June 1871 in the register, his judgment was that, if the conduct of the parties had shown that it was their intention to [886] treat the transaction as a mortgage and not as a sale, oral evidence of the terms of the mortgage would not be excluded. But it was clear to the Court that whatever the appellant's view might have been when he signed the endorsements on the grants, Nepean knew their effect perfectly well, and never for a moment intended to occupy the position of a mortgagee. The plaintiff's appeal was dismissed, and the decree of the Commissioner dismissing the suit was affirmed.

On this appeal,—

The Solicitor-General (Sir John Rigby, Q. C.) Mr. J. H. A. Branson, and Mr. G. J. Turner, for the appellant, argued that the appellate Courts were wrong in holding that oral evidence was inadmissible to show that the transaction in question was a mortgage and not a sale. The grounds on which they had reversed the finding of the first Court, which was that, on the facts, the contract of mortgage had been entered into, were insufficient. The decision of the first Court should have been upheld. It was a fact that could not be disputed that the entry in the register, and the endorsements on the grants of the allotted lands, did not contain all the terms of the agreement. Those terms had to be ascertained. That being the case, the decision of the Judicial Commissioner, who referred to ss. 91 and 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, excluding oral evidence of any agreement, or statement, for the purpose of adding to the written terms, was the result of a misapprehension. Any fact might be proved which showed in what manner the language of a document was related to existing facts—a proviso upon s. 92. On the other hand, the evidence had been rightly received by the Court of first instance, and rightly understood. That Court had arrived at the actual state of things. Both the appellate Courts had erred as to the reception of evidence, and the Judicial Commissioner had been wrong in holding that the entry in the register and the endorsement on the documents constituted an absolute conveyance in proprietary right to John Nepean. The word "ownership" did not import absolute ownership, but represented a right of property consistent with the arrangement between the parties to the transfer. The evidence showed that the transfer [887] effected was nothing more than a further development of the prior mortgage, by giving a usufructuary possession. There was no sale outright; but the mortgage was altered into one of a possessory character for the protection of the mortgagee, when he should have made further advances, and to enable him to re-pay himself. As to usufructuary mortgages reference was made to Thumbaswamy Mudelly v. Hossain Rowthen (1).

Mr. Cozens Hardy, Q. C., Mr. James Fox, and Mr. J. A. D. Heaton, for the respondents, contended that the burden of proof, which was distinctly upon the appellant to show that the transaction was a mortgage and not (as prima facie it appeared to be) an absolute transfer by way of a sale, had not been discharged by the appellant. The evidence, which the respondents did not so much insist upon excluding as in taking for what it was worth, was in result in favour of the defence, upon the balance of statements conflicting with documents, and in regard to the difficulty of trusting the oral testimony. The conclusions of the two appellate Courts were right, whether or not some of their reasoning was open to argument. The contention for the respondents mainly was that the evidence of the alleged arrangement, to have a usufructuary mortgage, had not displaced the documentary proof of there having been, in July 1871, a formal and absolute transfer of ownership. The positions taken up must be considered in their order of time; that the appellant had afterwards impugned the transfer considered by the Revenue officer to have been unqualified went no great way: and conversations alleged to have taken place twenty years before were insufficient to outweigh documents of title. Several orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner in 1871, while the facts were prominently before him, showed that he then refused to consider the transaction as anything but an actual transfer of the proprietary right. Kader Moideen's applications, after the transfer had been effected, were met by a refusal on the part of the officer cognizant of the entire transaction to recognize any right of his to have the sale cancelled, and Kader Moideen, during an interval of many years, ceased to insist on his supposed right.

JUDGMENT.

[888] Their Lordships' judgment was, afterwards, on the 9th June 1894, delivered by LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The appellant Kader Moideen seeks to redeem certain lands situated in the district of Shwegyin in Lower Burma which the respondents, deriving title from one John Nepean who died in 1883, claim to hold free from any right or equity of redemption.

The lands in question were originally waste lands, the property of the Government. In 1866 and 1867 they were sold to Kader Moideen in three lots under the rules then in force for the sale of waste lands in British Burma. On payment of preliminary expenses, and a fraction of the purchase-money as required by the rules, each of the three lots was conveyed to Kader Moideen "in full proprietary right," subject to conditions intended to protect the interest of the Government as an unpaid vendor. In 1871, at the joint request of Kader Moideen and John Nepean the property was transferred into Nepean's name in the Government books, and thenceforth he was recognized as owner and acted as such. The question is: What was the real meaning of this transaction? Was it an absolute sale or a transfer by way of security? The question is one of some difficulty depending upon the construction of documents, not wholly unambiguous, and upon a consideration of all the surrounding circumstances. Very little light is thrown upon the transaction by what has occurred since, or by the oral evidence on the one side, or on the other, which, to say the least, does not merit implicit confidence. The Judge of first instance, the District Judge of Shwegyin, decided in favour of Kader Moideen. His decision was reversed on appeal by the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Division. The Commissioner's judgment was affirmed by the Judicial Commissioner of Lower Burma, from whose Court the present appeal is brought.

The waste land rules, to which reference has been made, were a collection of regulations authenticated by the signature of the Officiating Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of British Burma and published by the Government of India (Foreign Department) under date 30th of June 1863. All unassessed waste lands, not subject to any private rights of proprietorship [889] or exclusive occupancy, were to be available for purchase in lots not exceeding 5,000 acres. But the same person might apply for two or more lots. Applications for purchase were to be entered in a register. There was to be a rough survey, and then, if the application was found to be in order, the land applied for was to be advertised for sale by auction at an upset price on a day named in the advertisement. Government sales were to be held quarterly. Sales were to be entered in a register in a prescribed form, containing separate columns for all necessary particulars, the last column No. 15 being headed: "Remarks in which are to be entered all transfers subsequent to the sale and the names of the persons to whom transferred." Rule 12 provided that, on payment of one-tenth of the purchase money and of all expenses of survey, demarcation, advertisement and sale, the purchaser should "receive a deed in the Form D annexed signed by the Deputy Commissioner, conveying to him the lot in full hereditary and transferable proprietary right free for ever from all demands on account of land revenue." The 18th rule provided that the purchaser might pay the whole of the purchase money when the lot was sold, or if he chose he might pay a portion, not being less than 10 per cent. at the time of the sale, and the remainder in instalments at any future time "not being more than ten years from the date of sale." In the latter case simple interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per year was to be charged on the unpaid portion of the purchase money, and the whole lot was to "remain hypothecated as security for the full discharge of the amount, including principal and interest, and be liable to sale by order of the Deputy Commissioner, if the said amount be not paid within the stipulated period." Interest on unpaid purchase money was to be payable on the 15th of May in each year.

Form D—the prescribed form of conveyance—so far as material is as follows:—

"Know all men by these presents that the Chief Commissioner of British Burma has conferred on his heirs executors administrators and assigns the grant of a tract of land measuring British Statute acres situated in to be holden by him in full proprietary rights subject to the following conditions:—

"I. The purchase money for this grant is Rs. of which Rs. have been already paid. On the if the entire purchase money [890] has not been paid up interest at 10 per cent. per annum will be charged on the balance and thereafter until the entire purchase money be paid up such interest will be chargeable on all unpaid arrears of the purchase money and all payments by the grantee shall be first carried to the credit of any outstanding arrear of interest due on such purchase money.

" II. Arrears of interest shall be treated in the same manner as arrears of land revenue, and be subject to the same measures of realization.

" III. No transfer of proprietary right, or transfer of interest, or creation of new interest in the grant beyond a lease of three years, will be recognized by the Civil Courts or the Revenue Officers of Government, unless duly registered in the office of the Deputy Commissioner of the District in which the grant is situated.

* * * * *

" IX. On the payment of the purchase money in full with all arrears of interest the grant will belong to the grantee free for ever from all demand for land revenue."

It may be observed in passing that in Form D no period is limited for the payment of the balance of the purchase money. On the other hand no provision is to be found in the rules corresponding with Condition III in Form D. Nor is there anything in the rules purporting to give the force and efficacy of a conveyance to an entry in the register of sales of waste lands.

The three grants in favour of Kader Moideen were all in the prescribed form. The total quantity of land in the grants was about 4,524 acres. The aggregate amount of purchase money was Rs. 7,158-13-7. The amount paid up was Rs. 768-9-11. The annual amount of interest payable on the balance was Rs. 639-0-5.

Kader Moideen had not sufficient means to turn these waste lands to a profitable account. Nor could he afford to pay the purchase money in full and wait until the lands rose in value with the general improvement of the country under British rule. He was a poor man at the time, and such attempts as he made to develop the property were not remunerative. He brought a number of people upon the land who were to pay no rent for three or four years. They were collected in settlements which are dignified by the style of villages and hamlets. The settlers received a little money and some rice and perhaps a few buffaloes. They made some clearances round the settlements. But the undertaking did not prosper. Many of the settlers left; their places were not filled by others, and lands which had been reclaimed became jungle again.

[891] In his difficulties Kader Moideen had recourse to Mr. John Nepean, a prosperous money-lender in Shwegyin, and obtained accommodation from him apparently on the usual terms and with the usual result. It was contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that the money paid to the Government for interest while the lands stood in Kader Moideen's name was supplied by Nepean. Very probably that was so. The contention is certainly correct as regards the payments made in 1869 and 1870.

On the 6th of June 1870 Kader Moideen assigned his interest in the lands in question to Nepean by way of mortgage to secure Rs. 3,000, which Kader Moideen acknowledged to have received that day "in cash." He bound himself on or before the expiration of ten months to repay the loan with interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per month, the principal and interest being payable in a lump sum. In default Nepean was empowered to sell, and Kader Moideen undertook to make good any deficiency. Out of the sum secured Rs. 639-0-5 were paid to Government in discharge of interest. The balance all but a few rupees consisted of old debts and arrears of interest. The mortgage is in English, a language which Kader Moideen did not understand. It is referred to as Exhibit F.

In the year 1871, as the time approached for payment of interest to the Government, Kader Moideen was at his wit's ends for money. Twice apparently he had been put into jail for non-payment of some judgment-debts, and twice he had been released on proof of his inability to pay. Nepean refused to lend him anything more, and he had neither cash nor credit.

On the 12th of May 1871 Kader Moideen presented a petition in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner of Shwegyin setting forth the Government grants, and alleging that he had given buffaloes and food to poor people to clear the land. Then he complained that the people on the land had been interfered with, and that he had lost a large amount of money, and he prayed the Court to make an inquiry according to the law and pass such order as the Court might think proper.

On the following day, the 13th of May, Kader Moideen presented another petition complaining that his petition of the 12th of May had been rejected, and suggesting that if no inquiry [892] were made on that petition "no benefit would be derived for the monies which had been paid by him," and adding that he thought that no benefit would be derived "if he paid the money due for the present year," and therefore he prayed that, if the Government did not wish to settle the matter in respect of the land, monies which had already been paid by him might be refunded to him and the land taken possession of.

It was suggested, and it seems not improbable, that these applications were made merely with the view of procuring some indulgence from Government.

On this petition the Deputy Commissioner Major Duff passed an order stating that he declined to go into vague general complaints, but adding "if petitioner wishes to give up the land let him state exactly the terms on which he will relinquish it, and he will meet with every encouragement free [? from me]."

Nepean came to hear of these applications, and naturally he was alarmed for his security. So he presented a petition which, after stating that he had a lien on the three grants, and that he had heard of Kader Moideen's application, proceeded as follows:—

"Your petitioner begs that the waste land rules referred to in the grant (s. 2) now in his possession may be carried out and orders issued accordingly.

"That if Kader Moideen be unable to pay the interest due to Government, your petitioner may be allowed to occupy his place in the matter after the above rules have been carried out.

"That your petitioner is ready to produce these three grants and the mortgage bond held by him to prove his claim."

The order passed was:—

"The time given for payment has not yet expired, and in such cases a little grace is always allowed, so that at present I am unable to pass any definite order in the matter.

"A. G. DUFF,

"15th May 1871."

On the 20th of May 1871 before the Deputy Commissioner a report was read stating that Kader Moideen had failed to pay Rs. 639-0-5 due on the 15th of May. The matter was ordered to stand over till the 25th; but as regards Nepean's application an order was made that notice should be issued to him to appear on the 23rd, if he should think fit, and show cause why his claim [893] to intervene should not be rejected under s. 3 of the grant.

Nepean appeared on the 23rd and presented another petition alleging that a transfer of interest had been created by the mortgage of the 6th of June 1870, and the deposit of the three grants, and after protesting against Kader Moideen allowing the Government to resume the land before satisfying his claim, he stated that, in the event of the Government not being able to recover their dues on the land from Kader Moideen, he would be willing to make good the amount, so that the Government would be no loser by the transfer.

The Deputy Commissioner having heard Nepean on the subject rejected his application and deferred the case as against Kader Moideen till the 26th.

On the 26th of May it was ordered that notice be served on Kader Moideen conformably with s. 1, Rule 46 of the Revenue Rules that, in default of payment within the time therein specified, the land would be liable to be sold.

So far Kader Moideen and Nepean had been working separately each for his own interest. The next thing is that they come before the Court with a concerted application. On the 29th of May they present a petition in Burmese, of which the Judge of first instance gives the following translation certified by him to be correct:—

"In the Court of the Deputy Commissioner, Shwegyin.

"The joint petition of Kader Moideen, land owner, and Mr. Nepean,— "Humbly sheweth.

"1.—That whereas Mr. Nepean desires to transfer to his own name from the name of Kader Moideen the land comprised in three grants that have been made to Kader Moideen, Kader Moideen consents to the name being changed.

"2.—That Mr. Nepean for his part will pay now the price due for these lands, together with Rs. 639-0-5 interest due, if the three grants owned by Kader Moideen are transferred to the name of Mr. Nepean.

"Wherefore we have both come to an agreement, and pray that the three grants be transferred from Kader Moideen's name to Mr. Nepean's.

"Signature of

"KADER MOIDEEN,

"29th May 1871.

"J. NEPEAN."

[894] The order on the petition was—

"The matter requires consideration; a definite order will be passed to-morrow.

"A. G. DUFF.

"29th May 1871."

On the next day the following order was passed:—

"Rangoon, the 30th May 1871.

Kader Moideen, Mr. Nepean, both present.

Read petition of Kader Moideen and Mr. Nepean requesting that the lands in question may be transferred to the latter.

Court.—As Mr. Nepean is fully aware of the circumstances of the case, and that in taking over the land he takes with it the responsibility for what is due to Government on it, I see no objection to the transfer being made and therefore—

Order—Transfer to be made as requested.

A. G. DUFF."

On the 3rd of June Kader Moideen and Nepean again attended before the Deputy Commissioner, and the following note in English was entered in column 15 of the register of sale of waste lands against each lot:—

"Ownership transferred by original purchaser Kader Moideen to John Nepean on the third day of June 1871.

Before me, A. G. Duff, Deputy Commissioner."

On the same day a memorandum in the same words signed and attested in the same manner was endorsed on each of the three Government grants.

On the 5th of June Nepean paid into the Government Treasury Rupees 639-0-5 on account of interest and Rs. 3,390-3-8 on account of principal in respect of the lands transferred into his name on the 3rd of June. In the waste land register this sum was apportioned so as to pay up in full the purchase money of two of the lots leaving a balance due on the third.

On the 12th of June Nepean paid into the Government Treasury the sum of Rs. 3,041-5-4, which discharged in full all claims of the Government in respect of the property.

[895] As soon as Kader Moideen realized the fact that the effect of the transfer was that he was put on one side altogether he repented of the bargain. He presented two petitions to the Court making random allegations and asking for relief on grounds more or less absurd. The Court refused to listen to him as he had transferred the property. Nepean presented a counter-petition and obtained a certificate that the land was legally transferred to him. Then Kader Moideen sued for the balance of the money expressed to be secured by the mortgage of the 6th of June 1870 which he alleged he had never received and he applied for leave to sue as a pauper. But this application met the fate of the rest. It was ultimately rejected on the ground that his statements on cross-examination were not satisfactory.

Baffled at all points, outcast and bankrupt, Kader Moideen went away to Toungoo, a place distant about three days' journey from Shwegyin. There he seems to have lived ever since. Lately in the disturbances which followed the annexation of Upper Burma he made some money by Government contracts, and then, as he alleges, he sent a message to Mrs. Nepean asking her to furnish accounts of the rents and profits of the lands which he had transferred to her husband. After some little delay a formal application to the like effect was made on his behalf. It was refused, and then the present suit was brought against the respondents.

Among other defences, to which it is not necessary to refer, the principal defendants set up that the transfer to Nepean was an absolute and unconditional transfer, and that Nepean agreed, in consideration thereof, "to cancel the said mortgage of 1870, to release the plaintiff from his covenant to repay the 3,000 rupees and interest secured thereby and other debts, and to pay and indemnify the plaintiff from all liability to pay the balance of the purchase money of the said land and interest due thereon."

The evidence of the witnesses on behalf of the plaintiff at the trial is not worth much attention. No statement by the plaintiff himself can be accepted without corroboration. There were witnesses who said they heard Nepean tell Kader Moideen that he could redeem the land at any time. One of them was a subordinate officer of the Court who remembered drafting the [896] joint petition of the 29th of May 1871. Another was a person who is described by the principal witness for the defence with some breadth and freedom of outline as "an East Indian gentleman of sorts," but who seems to have been neither more nor less than an itinerant hawker of jewellery. Another was a person who is now a myook or township officer. The learned Judge of first instance gave weight to his evidence on the ground of his position and also on the ground of his age. The latter consideration is not unimportant having regard to the habits of the people and the teaching of their religion. "His age," observes the learned Judge, "is in his favour. He is 59, and the older a Burman the more truthful." But however respectable these gentlemen may be, and whatever may be their claims to attention, it would be dangerous to rely upon the recollection of witnesses as to conversations which took place twenty years back.

The principal witness on behalf of the defence was a Mr. Moss who claims one-fourth of the property. He was at one time in the police force, and is now apparently a certificated advocate. He had married a daughter of Nepean and was very intimate with him. Nepean always "consulted" him "about his private affairs" and got his "help to write petitions." He wrote the mortgage of the 6th of June 1870—a well-drawn instrument, except that one statement in it certainly is not quite in accordance with the facts. According to his own account he took part in the negotiations which led to the arrangement in question, and in his examination in chief he gave a list of the debts from which he said Nepean agreed to release Kader Moideen. Much must depend upon the view which is to be taken of his evidence.

Of the judgments which have been pronounced in this case it is enough to say that the judgment of the District Judge of Shwegyin is a very painstaking and able review of the evidence before the Court. The judgments of the other learned Judges seem to be more concerned with questions as to the admissibility of evidence than with the facts and circumstances of the case.

The learned counsel for the respondents did not contend that any evidence tending to throw light upon the real meaning of the arrangement between the parties ought to be excluded; but they suggested that the proper course would be to take the [897] joint petition of the 29th of May 1871, the orders made upon it, the entries in the register of waste lands, and the note or memorandum endorsed on each of the three deeds of grant, and to consider the effect of those documents by themselves apart from the rest of the evidence; if the transaction so regarded presents the appearance of an absolute and unconditional transfer then, they said, arises the question whether the rest of the evidence is sufficient to displace the prima facie view of the transaction. That was a very plausible way of putting the case for the respondents, and it was urged with much force and ability by Mr. Fox as well as by his learned leader. But in their Lordships' opinion the learned counsel laid too great stress on the endorsements upon the deeds of grant, and rather overlooked the effect of the statements in the joint petition.

It may be conceded that if the Court had nothing but the endorsements before it, the proper inference would be that for some consideration or other, which was not disclosed, the property had been made over to Nepean by way of sale. But when the joint petition, and the orders made upon it, are examined it becomes apparent that the entries in the register of waste lands were intended merely to give effect to the prayer of the petition, and that the endorsements on the deeds of grant are nothing more than a record of the arrangement proposed by the parties and sanctioned by the Deputy Commissioner. The petition asks that the lands may be transferred into Nepean's name. But that is not all. It purports to proceed upon an arrangement that Nepean shall forthwith pay the arrears of interest due to the Government and the balance of the purchase money. What is the effect of this arrangement? If the transaction were an absolute sale, or even an out and out gift, it would have been immaterial to Kader Moideen whether Nepean paid the balance of the purchase money or not. On the other hand, if the transaction was really a transfer by way of security, the condition that the purchase money should be paid up at once was some consideration for the transfer and a stipulation essential for the complete protection of Kader Moideen. When once the purchase money was paid in full the right of redemption would not be liable to be defeated by failure on the part of Nepean to fulfil the conditions [898] of the Government grants. It may be suggested perhaps that Nepean's undertaking to pay the purchase money was not a stipulation in favour of Kader Moideen, but merely an offer intended to gain the favourable consideration of the Government. But the answer is that that is not the natural meaning of the language of the petition, nor was it so understood by the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner warned Nepean that in taking over the land he was taking with it the responsibility for what was due to Government. But he did not suggest that Nepean, as between himself and the Government, was assuming any greater responsibility. He did not propose to alter the conditions of the Government grants, or to bind Nepean to pay up the whole purchase money at once. In fact he completed the transfer in the waste lands register before Nepean paid anything on account of either principal or interest.

The result, therefore, in their Lordships' opinion is that on a view of the transaction thus limited, it could not have been the intention of the parties that there should be a transfer outright depriving Kader Moideen of all interest in the property.

In connection with this part of the case it may be stated that the District Judge points out that the Burmese word which would naturally be used to describe a transfer out and out, and which Mrs. Nepean, a Burmese lady, does use in her evidence to describe the transaction, is not found in the joint petition of the 29th of May 1871. It is, said the learned Judge, "conspicuously absent."

The next question is this: Can any reliance be placed on Mr. Moss' statement that the consideration for the transfer was the cancellation of all debts then due from Kader Moideen? According to Mr. Moss' story there were many interviews between Kader Moideen and Nepean in connection with the matter, and the final bargain was made in his presence on the evening of the 28th May. His account of it is as follows:—

"Mr. Nepean said the land must be made over to him entirely and no other rights allowed. It was further agreed that upon the land being entirely made over all debts due from Kader Moideen to Nepean should be cancelled. It became late when the interview ended—it took place in Mr. Nepean's house—[899] the bargain was that they should present a petition next day. The debts referred to were the money due on Exhibit F and also on some promissory notes Exhibits 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 17."

That account has an air of precision, but it is a careless statement at best. On cross examination Mr. Moss admitted that on one of the notes, Exhibit 1, (which was the largest in amount and only Rs. 100 short of all the rest put together) there was endorsed a memorandum, dated the 6th of June 1870, showing that that document did not at the time of the alleged bargain represent an existing liability on the part of Kader Moideen. It had been merged in the mortgage security of the 6th of June 1870. When he gave his evidence in chief Mr. Moss must have been either aware or ignorant of this indorsement. If he was aware of it his evidence was intentionally misleading. If he was ignorant of it his recollection of the arrangement between Kader Moideen and Nepean is obviously not entirely trustworthy. Of the other documents (Exhibits 2, 3, 4, 5 and 17) two purport to be given to Mr. Nepean; the other three, in which the interest is at a higher rate, amounting in one instance to 108 per cent. per annum, purport to be given to both Mr. and Mrs. Nepean. Now it is not a little startling to find that Exhibit F and all these documents were retained by Mr. Nepean until his death without anything to show that they had been cancelled by the arrangement of May 1871. It was said truly, that Kader Moideen, who by the way was never worth suing during Nepean's life, was never sued upon any one of them. But that does not destroy or affect the inference to be drawn from their retention. Why should they have been retained? It was contrary to Nepean's practice. Mr. Moss admits that "when documents were cancelled his practice was to return them." It was suggested that Nepean was justified in retaining Exhibit F as a document of title relating to the lands made over to him. That may be an excuse for retaining it, but it is no excuse for retaining it uncanceled. No such excuse, however, applies to the case of the other exhibits. It was said that it was not wrong on the part of Nepean to keep these documents if he did not mean to sue upon them; but if Nepean had died before they were statute barred, and Kader Moideen had been then [900] worth suing, and had been sued, he would have had probably no defence to an action by Nepean's legal representatives, and certainly none to an action by Mrs. Nepean. Then there was another excuse. It was said that Kader Moideen was a troublesome person, as indeed he seems to have been, and that Mr. Nepean was justified in not performing to the full his part of the bargain until Kader Moideen executed an absolute conveyance of the property in his favour; but Nepean never set this case up in his lifetime. His case was that the transfer entered in the Government books and recorded in the endorsements on the deeds of grant was sufficient and complete, and that nothing more was required; and, if Mr. Moss is to be believed, Nepean never asked for anything more. "I don't know," he says, "of any efforts being made after the transfer in 1871 to get Kader Moideen to sign a regular conveyance of the land."

If matters stood there, and there were nothing more in the case, the inference from the retention of the documents in question would be very strong; but it seems to be irresistible when the circumstances connected with one of these documents (Exhibit 5) are examined.

Exhibit 5 purports to be dated the 25th of June 1869, and to be a security for a loan of Rs. 300. It is not merely a bond or note binding Kader Moideen personally, but it is also a mortgage of his house in Shwegyin to secure the sum borrowed with interest at 3 per cent. per month. This house was not situated on any part of the lands comprised in the Government grants. So Mr. Nepean could not have had the excuse for retaining it, which it is alleged he had for retaining Ex. F. If Mr. Moss' statement is correct, the house ought to have been released, and the mortgage itself handed back to Kader Moideen when the lands were transferred to Nepean. Now the subsequent dealings with this house can be traced in the record. When Kader Moideen applied for leave to sue as a pauper in September 1871 he had to file a list of property belonging to him and to account for it. In that list is to be found this entry (p. 76, Ex. V.) "a house mortgaged to Mr. Nepean. It is now under attachment." Upon this list he was examined before the Sikke or subordinate officer. In his deposition (p. 104, 1, 11) he said: "I have never paid money[901] as interest on the money for which I mortgaged my house to the defendant as shown in the list filed by me." His object of course at that time was to show that he had no beneficial interest in the house by reason of the charge upon it in favour of Nepean. It does not appear whether Nepean was present at that examination or not; but he certainly was present at the cross-examination of Kader Moideen upon this deposition (p. 95) when the proceedings were removed to the Court of the Deputy Commissioner. It is not a little remarkable that Kader Moideen was asked no questions about this house. That it was still in mortgage to Mr. Nepean and under attachment seems to have been common ground. If the truth had been that the mortgage was cancelled, and that Kader Moideen was the unencumbered owner, there would have been an answer at once to his application for leave to sue as a pauper. Then it is stated in Kader Moideen's evidence in this suit, and not contradicted by Mr. Moss, that the house was actually sold under the attachment, that it came into Mr. Moss' possession, and that Kader Moideen was turned out. Mr. Moss' statement is, therefore, disproved in the only instance in which it was possible to test its accuracy, and, consequently, their Lordships have no hesitation in rejecting it entirely.

The probabilities of the case remain to be considered. From the evidence before the Court it is easy to see what manner of man Kader Moideen was, and what was the exact position of the parties at the time the arrangement was made. Kadar Moideen had staked his all upon this property. He seems to have spent upon it everything he had and everything he could borrow. It was the only thing he had to look to. He evidently fancied that it was of great value. That it was of some value is plain from the Deputy Commissioner's reply to his petition of the 13th of May 1871, and plainer still from Nepean's own conduct. Kader Moideen clung to the property desperately. He was a reckless and unscrupulous man and certainly had no consideration for his chief creditor. It is inconceivable that he should have consented to give the land to Nepean without stipulating for some benefit for himself. He was under no personal liability to the Government. The only remedy the Government had was against the land. As regards his debts to Nepean he was [902] secure in his impecuniosity. To such a man as he was a release from debts, which he could not possibly pay, and for which in all probability he would never be troubled, was no benefit at all. Mr. Nepean was quite at his mercy. He had simply to do nothing, and the land would be forfeited, and Mr. Nepean's chance of saving anything from the wreck would be gone. On the other hand it was well worth Nepean's while to give something to get the land into his own hands. He thought so too.

There is a significant passage in Mr. Moss' evidence. In the course of the negotiation which led to the final arrangement the position which Nepean took up according to Mr. Moss was not that he had advanced as much as the land was worth, and that he would not throw good money after bad. His refusal to give any further assistance was based on the precarious nature of the title. What he said to Kader Moideen according to Mr. Moss was, "I refuse altogether to advance you more money, because I find you have not got a full title to the land." Mr. Moss it seems and Mr. Nepean had been studying the waste land rules together, and they were alarmed by the provision in Rule 18 as to hypothecation. No wonder Mr. Nepean was puzzled by the word. "He was not a good English scholar." Later on Mr. Moss adds: "Mr. Nepean did not understand written English fully, and that is an instance." Mr. Moss who referred to books "in connection with this transfer of land" came to the conclusion that the title was not secure so long as any part of the purchase money remained due to the Government.

It must be added that "it is indeed a common custom in Burma when land is mortgaged, even when only for a short term of years, to transfer it into the name of the mortgagee in the revenue registers." So says the District Judge, and the statement was not controverted.

Under these circumstances the arrangement that would naturally suggest itself would be that Nepean should pay up all that was due to Government for principal and interest, and hold the land in his own name to recoup himself for everything he had advanced and for all he might have to spend in order to make the land profitable. Kader Moideen would be flattered with the hope of redeeming the land some day. Such a prospect or dream would be [903] likely to take the fancy of such a man as Kader Moideen. And no doubt it would seem to Nepean at the time that he was making an empty concession, and that nothing more would be heard of Kader Moideen after he was once dispossessed.

It was said in the course of the argument that a decision in Kader Moideen's favour would involve an imputation of fraud upon a dead man, and that seems to have been the view of the Courts below; but it is to be observed that Nepean never asserted that he had bought the land from Kader Moideen. Kader Moideen had "abandoned" it. It was "legally transferred" to him. But there was no suggestion of a sale. That case was not set up until after his death—nor was he ever called upon to allow Kader Moideen to redeem. It is not by any means clear that he would have resisted a suit for redemption if such a suit had been brought in his lifetime.

As regards the terms of redemption Kader Moideen states that the land was to be re-transferred to him when he repaid all he owed and all Nepean paid on account of the land to Government, and that the interest was to be 10 per cent. and to be compound interest. It was said there was no proof in support of these statements and that they rested on Kader Moideen's word alone. That is true. But they are statements in some degree against his interest; and having regard to the rate of interest payable to Government, it seems not improbable that such an arrangement should have been made. If there is to be redemption the terms are certainly not unfavourable to the persons in possession, and Kader Moideen must be held to them. As regards moneys laid out in improvements the decree as originally framed gave no interest. On the application of the defendant with the consent of the plaintiff the decree was varied so as to give simple interest. But the rate of interest was not specified. The rate of interest will be the same as the rate of interest on the moneys paid to the Government. Probably the decree as it stands would be so construed. But in order to prevent any possible misunderstanding the decree will be varied by leaving out the word "interest" in paragraph 2 and inserting "simple interest at the rate of 10 per cent per annum."

In the result their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty [904] that the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner and the judgment of the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Division should be reversed and the decision of the District Judge restored with the variation above mentioned.

The respondents must pay the costs of this appeal and the costs in the three Courts below.

Costs—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 222—Costs of partition charged under that section on shares of parties in partition suit—Mortgage by one sharer of undivided shares—Liability for costs of partition of mortgagee not party to partition suit—Application in suit by person not party to suit—Remedy by supplemental suit—Procedure.

K.S. and K.B. were joint owners of certain properties. In 1886, K.S. mortgaged his undivided share to S.C., in consideration of a loan advanced by S.C. to him. In 1887 K.S. brought a suit, to which S.C. was not made a party, against K.B. for partition, and, on 27th April 1888, obtained a decree under which a commission of partition was issued. In the course of the suit both K.S. and K.B. died. K.B. on 2nd September 1888 and K.S. on 30th March 1892, and by orders of Court their sons were put on the record in place of their respective fathers. The return to the commission of partition was made on 24th February 1892, and on 20th July 1893 an order was made confirming the return; and, under s. 222 of the Civil Procedure Code, charging the costs of suit and of the commission of partition to the shares of the plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, in the suit. Meanwhile in July 1889 S.C. brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, dated 5th August 1889, for an account and sale, and in that suit a final order for sale was made [905] on 5th January 1891, which however was only filed on 19th August 1893. Under that order the property was advertised for sale, the return to the commission of partition being set out in the abstract of title as part of the title, and the property to be sold being described as a divided moiety. of the suit and of the partition and other debts and liabilities for which they were liable, held, that the mortgagee having had the benefit of the partition, and having accepted and approved of it as part of his title, as shown by the proceedings for sale, was, though not a party to the partition suit, bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition. He was therefore liable in respect of a proportionate share of the charge for costs of the partition created by the order of Court made in that suit under s. 222 of the Civil Procedure Code, and such proportionate share of those costs should be deducted in priority out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property.

The defendants in the partition suit, however, not being parties to the mortgage suit, such an order could not be properly made at their instance, but they should enforce the charge for costs against the mortgagee by supplemental suit, and the Court stayed the sale of the property for a reasonable time to give the parties an opportunity of moving for stay of the sale in any such suit as might be instituted.

THIS was an application by Durga Churn Bhattacharjee and Uma Churn Bhattacharjee, two of the defendants in a revived partition suit No. 217 of 1887, in which a decree for partition had been made, and a commission of partition issued, that the Registrar might be at liberty to sell certain property and pay thereout their debts and liabilities, and the costs of the suit, and of the commission of partition.

The petition stated that by a decree made by the High Court on 27th April 1888 in a suit (217 of 1887) brought by Khetterpal Sritirutno against Khelal Kristo Bhattacharjee, the plaintiff and defendant were declared to be jointly entitled to certain property in equal shares, and it was ordered that the property should be partitioned between them, and that a commission of partition should issue, and accounts and enquiries were directed to be taken: (1) on account of the rents and profits of the property which may have come into the hands of the parties respectively or to other persons by their order or for their use; (2) an enquiry as to what were the valid and subsisting debts owing by [906] the joint family; and (3) how such debts were to be provided for; that by the said decree it was also ordered and decreed that the parties should pay their own costs of the suit up to and including the decree to be taxed by the taxing officer of the Court as between attorney and client on scale No. 2, and that the expenses of the commission of partition should be borne by the parties in proportion to the value of their respective shares; that on 2nd September 1888 Khelal Kristo Bhattacharjee died, and his five sons (two of whom, the petitioners Durga Churn Bhattacharjee and Uma Churn Bhattacharjee, were adults, and the three others Gouri Churn Bhattacharjee, Bhabani Churn Bhattacharjee, and Umbica Churn Bhattacharjee were minors under 18 years of age), were by an order of Court, dated 28th February 1889, put on the record as defendants in the place of their father; and they duly entered appearance in the revived suit, and by an order of Court, dated 26th July 1889, Nundo Lall Mookerjee was appointed guardian ad litem of the minor defendants; that in pursuance of the decree of 27th April 1888 a commission of partition was issued to the Registrar of the Court to make the partition as directed by the decree; that on 30th March 1892, pending the proceedings for partition before the said Commissioner, the plaintiff Khetterpal Sritirutno died, leaving six sons his heirs and representatives; that on 24th February 1892 the Commissioner made his return to the commission of partition, whereby he allotted to the plaintiff a moiety of the properties in suit, and the remaining moiety to the substituted defendants in the suit; that on 10th May 1892 by order of Court the suit was revived and the names of the sons of the plaintiff, namely, Kally Churn Bhattacharjee, Tara Churn Bhattacharjee, Bhoirab Chunder Bhattacharjee, Bogola Churn Bhattacharjee, Tripura Churn Bhattacharjee, and Matungee Churn Bhattacharjee (the last of whom was a minor, for whom his brother Kally Churn was appointed next friend) were put on the record of the suit in the place of their father Khetterpal Sritirutno; that on 20th July 1893, the Court, on the suit coming on for hearing for further direction, confirmed the return of the Commissioner, ordered that the parties should be put into possession of their allotments under the partition, and that the costs of all parties of the suit and commission of partition should [907] form a charge on the respective shares allotted by the return to the commission of partition; that the costs (together with debts and liabilities due by the estate of Khelal Kristo Bhattacharjee) amounted to a sum which the petitioners had no means of paying except by sale of a portion of the property allotted to them and the other defendants on the partition; that the share of the plaintiffs in the joint properties, was, before the institution of the partition suit, mortgaged to one Sristidhur Couch, who on 5th August 1889 had obtained a decree in a suit (334 of 1889) brought on his mortgage, and under an order of the 5th January 1891 had caused the property to be advertized for sale on 31st March 1894; and that the mortgagee had obtained a material benefit from the partition, inasmuch as his mortgagor's interest was now decided and ascertained.

The petitioners asked, therefore, for an order that the Registrar should be at liberty to sell so much of the properties allotted to them and the minor defendants as might be necessary for payment of the costs of the suit and commission of partition and the debts and liabilities of the defendants, and out of the proceeds pay such costs and debts and liabilities, and also out of the proceeds of sale in suit No. 334 of 1889, in which Sristidhur Couch was plaintiff, and Kally Churn Bhattacharjee and others were defendants, pay the proportionate share of the costs of the commission of partition payable by the plaintiffs to the petitioners and the minor defendants in the suit.

From an affidavit filed on behalf of Sristidhur Couch, the plaintiff in suit No. 334 of 1889, it appeared that the plaintiff Khetterpal Sritirutno had mortgaged to him on 11th January 1886 his undivided half share in the property, the subject of the partition suit, for Rs. 15,000 with interest at 10 per cent.; that, on default being made in the payment of the amount, suit No. 334 of 1889 was instituted in 1889 against Khetterpal Sritirutno on the mortgage, and on 5th August 1889 Sristidhur Couch obtained a decree in that suit, under which the sum of Rs. 22,000 odd was found on the report of the Registrar, which was duly confirmed by the Court, to be due to him, and a day was fixed for the payment by the defendant of the sum due; but default was made in payment, and Sristidhur Couch obtained [908] an order, dated 5th January 1891, for sale of the property; that after the death of Khetterpal Sritirutno the suit was revived against his sons who were substituted for their father as parties defendants on the record; and that under the order of the 5th January 1891 the property had been advertized for sale on 31st March 1894, on behalf of Sristidhur Couch. It was therefore submitted that there were no grounds for the application.

SALE, J.—This application is free from doubt except so far as it seeks to affect the plaintiff in the mortgage suit.

The facts are briefly as follows: Khetterpal Sritirutno and Khelal Kristo Bhattacharjee were joint owners of certain properties.

On the 11th of January 1886 Khetterpal Sritirutno executed a mortgage of his undivided share in most of these properties in favour of Sristidhur Couch to secure the repayment of a loan obtained from him. In 1887 Khetterpal brought this suit against his co-owner for an account and partition and obtained a decree, dated 27th April 1888, under which a commission of partition was issued. The Commissioner's return is dated 24th February 1892.

In the course of the proceedings both the original plaintiff and the original defendant died, and there was considerable delay in reviving the suit.

On the 20th July 1893 an order was obtained confirming the return and charging the costs of suit and of the partition upon the properties, the subject of the suit.

In July 1889 Sristidhur Couch brought a suit upon his mortgage, and on the 5th of August 1889 obtained a decree for an account and sale. The Registrar's report on the result of the account is dated 24th January 1890. A final order for sale was obtained on the 5th of January 1891, but it remained unfiled for two years and seven months, that is until the 19th August 1893, a month after the date of the order for the confirmation of the return. The mortgagee, though in a position to [909] proceed to a sale under the order of the 5th January 1891, waited until after the partition was completed, and until after the return was confirmed, his object obviously being to obtain the benefit of the partition which was being effected in the partition suit.

As the result of the partition the mortgage now attaches to a divided share. The costs of the partition by which this result has been obtained were charged upon the properties under s. 222 of the Civil Procedure Code. This section is a new provision, the object of which is to secure the payment of costs, and it is of special value in partition suits to which it is now generally applied. The mortgagee is entitled to the benefit which has resulted from the partition, but the question is whether he can claim that benefit, and at the same time disclaim liability in respect of the charge for costs created by the Court under an express provision of the Code. His contention is that not being a party to the partition suit he is not bound by the order creating the charge.

A mortgagee is not a necessary party to a partition suit, but he may, and frequently does, obtain leave to attend the proceedings as a quasi-party. The mortgagee in the present case did not obtain leave to attend the proceedings in the partition suit, but in the relation in which he stands to the mortgagor he is equally with him bound by the partition. It would of course be open to him to impugn the partition on the ground of fraud, but there is no suggestion of any such ground of complaint existing in the case. On the contrary, it appears from the proceedings before the Registrar under the order for sale that the return of the Commissioner is set forth in the abstract of title as part of the title, and the property to be sold is described in the notification of sale as the divided northern moiety. The mortgagee has thus signified his approval and acceptance of the return. He objects to nothing connected with the partition proceedings except the order confirming the return, so far as it directs the costs to be charged on the property. Is he entitled to say that his title, though derived from the mortgagor, is yet so distinct as to be free from the equities attaching to the property as an incident of the partition? The point is new. The mortgage [910] having been executed prior to the institution of the partition suit, the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply. If, however, the mortgagee had proceeded to a sale pending the partition, the purchaser would have become a necessary party to the partition suit, and would in the matter of costs have been subject to the liability of his predecessor in title. Is the mortgagee entitled to be placed in a better position? In my opinion the mortgagee, having adopted the partition proceedings, and having accepted the divided share, must take this share subject to the charge for a proportionate share of the costs of the partition as distinguished from the costs of suit, and this proportionate share of the costs ought to be deducted in priority out of the sale-proceeds of the mortgaged property.

It is objected, however, that this order cannot be made at the instance of the defendants in the partition suit, who are not parties to the mortgage suit. This objection, though purely technical, is not without force, and, being pressed, I shall give time to the present applicants to take the necessary steps by supplemental suit or otherwise to enforce this charge for costs as against the mortgagee. This application, therefore, so far as it affects the mortgagee, must stand over for disposal until after hearing of the new suit. The property if sold with notice of the charge cannot be expected to fetch its full value, and such sale would probably be followed by litigation. I shall therefore direct the sale to stand over for a reasonable time in order to give the parties an opportunity for moving for stay of the sale in any new suit which may be instituted.

An order in terms of the remaining part of the application will be made.

APPLICATION for letters of administration to the estate of Sewnarain Mohata, deceased.

The applicant Sreekissen Mohata was one of the sons of the deceased, and stated that his father, who was a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara law, and had carried on business in Burra Bazar in Calcutta under the name of Sewnarain Sreekissen, died in Calcutta on 14th June 1893, intestate, leaving him surviving Ancha Bibee, his sole widow, and two sons, the petitioner and Gopeekissen, then both minors; that on 11th July 1894, letters of administration to his estate and effects were granted by the High Court to his widow Ancha Bibee during the minority of the infant sons with effect within the province of Bengal; that Ancha Bibee died on 17th April 1894 without having administered the estate of Sewnarain Mohata; that the petitioner "is the eldest son of the deceased Sewnarain, and was born at Bikanir, in the territories of the Maharajah of Bikanir, on the 9th Maugh Buddee 1934, corresponding with 27th January 1878, and is now of the age of upwards of 16 years and five months; that your petitioner is not domiciled in British India but is a Hindu subject of the Maharajah [912] of the Native State of Bikanir, and as such has reached his majority upon attaining the age of 16 years."

The petitioner further stated that the deceased left no immoveable property, and had no other property except the stock-in-trade outstandings and profits of the shop in Calcutta.

Mr. Pugh appeared in support of the application.

ORDER.

SALE, J.—This is an application for letters of administration to the property and effects of the late Sewnarain Mohata. The deceased came from Bikanir in the territories of the Maharajah of Bikanir. He carried on business as a dealer in piecegoods, and died in June 1893, leaving a widow and two sons, Sreekissen, the present applicant, and Gopeekissen. In July 1893 letters of administration to the property and credits of the deceased were granted to his widow during the minority of his infant sons. The widow has recently died, and now Sreekissen Mohata, the elder of the two sons, applies for letters of administration to his father's estate, which in British India consists of a business in piecegoods which had been carried on by the deceased in his lifetime and by the widow after his death. The applicant says he is a little over the age of sixteen years, and that according to the law of his own country he has attained the age of majority. It appears from the verified petition of the mother, filed by her when she was applying for letters of administration, that a statement was made as to the age of Sreekissen, which I think sufficiently supports his allegation that he is now over the age of sixteen years: and for the purposes of the present application I will assume that, according to the laws of Bikanir, a person attains his majority at the age of sixteen years.

The question is whether, under the Probate and Administration Act, the applicant, being a major according to the law of his own country, is, notwithstanding that he is still under the age of 18 years, entitled to an order for letters of administration.

Section 3 of the Probate and Administration Act states that " 'minor' means any person subject to the Indian Majority Act, 1875, who has not attained his majority within the meaning of that Act, and any other person who has not completed his age of eighteen years; and 'minority' means the status of any such person."

[913] Section 13 of the Act provides that "letters of administration cannot be granted to any person who is a minor."

Turning to the Indian Majority Act, which is specifically referred to in the Probate and Administration Act, we find it stated in the preamble that the Act is intended to apply to persons domiciled in British India, and the preamble proceeds; "It is expedient to prolong the period of non-age, and to attain more uniformity and certainty respecting the age of majority than now exists." Then in s. 3, after providing for the case of certain persons as to whom guardians may have been appointed and fixing the age of majority for such persons, it proceeds: "Subject as aforesaid, every other person domiciled in British India shall be deemed to have completed his majority when he shall have completed his age of eighteen years and not before."

The classification therefore adopted by the Probate and Administration Act, so far as the provisions relating to the age of majority are concerned, comprises first all that class of persons to whom the Majority Act applies, that is to say, persons who are domiciled in British India; and, next, the class consisting of "any other persons who have not completed the age of eighteen years." Obviously, therefore, if the classification is to be of an intelligible character, the words "any other person" must mean any other person not domiciled in British India, and therefore must include persons whether they be aliens or foreigners. If that be so, then the effect of s. 3 as regards aliens is to provide that, when under the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act they seek the authority of the British Court for the purpose of dealing with property in British India, they must, before they can obtain such authority, be of the age of eighteen years. It was contended by Mr. Pugh that it must be taken that the Legislature, in fixing the age of disability under the Probate and Administration Act, must be taken to refer only to the case of persons domiciled in this country, and that it must not be assumed, unless there are clear expressions in the Act to the contrary, that the Legislature was seeking to attach the condition of disability to persons to whom no such condition of disability would attach under the laws of their own country.

Two cases were referred to by Mr. Pugh in support of his [914] contention—Jefferys v. Boosey (1) and Macleod v. Attorney General for New South Wales (2). In the former of these cases a passage at p. 895 of the report was specially referred to. It is as follows: "The general rule is, that words in an Act of Parliament, and indeed in every other instrument, must be construed in their ordinary sense, unless there is something to show plainly that they cannot have been used, and so, in fact, were not used, in that sense. Here the words to be construed are, 'author,' 'assignee,' and 'assigns.' These words plainly comprehend aliens as well as others; and there is nothing, as it seems to me, in any part of the Act to show that they are to be restricted." That passage would seem to support what I venture to think is the natural construction of the section of the Probate and Administration Act, by virtue of which aliens would come within the words "any other person," as used in s. 3. A further passage in the same case at p. 926 of the report was also referred to. That passage is as follows: "The Legislature has no power over any persons except its own subjects, that is, persons natural born subjects, or resident, or whilst they are within the limits of the kingdom. The Legislature can impose no duties except on them; and when legislating for the benefit of persons, must prima facie be considered to mean the benefit of those who owe obedience to our laws, and whose interests the Legislature is under a correlative obligation to protect."

It is here clearly indicated that the persons whose rights the Legislature would have a right to affect, besides persons domiciled within its jurisdiction, are aliens resident within the jurisdiction, or while they are within the jurisdiction.

The second case which has been referred to is much to the same effect. In that case a person who had married in the colony of New South Wales, and who, in the lifetime of his wife, married again at St. Louis in United States of America, was, on his return to the colony of New South Wales, prosecuted for bigamy under a Colonial statute. It was held that the words "whosoever" and "wheresoever," though of universal application, must be understood as having been used by the Legislature subject to [915] the well-known and well-considered limitation that they were only legislating for those who were actually within their jurisdiction and within the limits of the colony. The limitation as thus laid down is said to be found at p. 459 of the report.

Now it appears to me there is nothing in either of these two cases which indicates that anything but the ordinary and natural construction should be placed on the words of the section of the Probate and Administration Act which defines the age of majority. And seeing that the action of the Legislature in fixing the age of majority at the age of 18 years is merely intended to apply to the cases of those persons who are seeking to deal with property within the jurisdiction of the Court, I do not think it can be said that the plain meaning of the section is to be set aside for the purpose of making the definition of the status of minority apply only to persons domiciled in this country. To my mind the words are express, and the limit of the period of disability is for the purpose of the Act fixed at 18 years, not merely for persons domiciled in this country, but for any other persons whether they be aliens or not.

The result is that I must refuse the application.

NEWAZ ALI (Petitioner) v. RAM BALLABH CHAKRAVARTI (Opposite party).
[29th August, 1893.]

THE facts which gave rise to these proceedings were shortly as follows :—

Certain property, the subject-matter of the dispute, which then belonged to one Idu, was sold in 1295, at an auction sale, and then purchased by one Siddik Mia benami for one Hossein Ali. Hossein Ali was dead at the time of these proceedings, and was represented by Izatunnissa Bibee and her children. In 1297, the property was again sold in execution of a mortgage decree, and it was then bought by Newaz Ali, who was a naib in the employment of the lady, and it was alleged as against him that he was a mere benamidar for her. Ram Ballabh Chakravarti, it appeared, was at the time these proceedings were instituted a kurpurdaz in her employ, and himself had no claim to or interest in the property. In 1299, a quarrel took place between the lady and Newaz Ali, and subsequently thereto the latter applied to the Civil Court, and obtained an order for possession by virtue of his purchase, and obtained symbolical possession. Thereafter on his going to take actual possession he was resisted by Ram Ballabh Chakravarti and others on the side of the lady, and a riot ensued. The police thereupon reported the matter to the Magistrate, who instituted these proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, making Ram Ballabh Chakravarti (who was therein described as the kurpurdaz of the lady), the first party, and Newaz Ali, the second party. The Magistrate decided that Hossein Ali and his descendants had been in continual possession of the land in dispute, and that the purchase by Newaz Ali was benami for them, and after going into the question as to whether the latter could avail himself of his symbolical possession, and deciding that against him, made an order that the first party should be maintained in possession till ousted by due course of law.

Newaz Ali then obtained a rule from the High Court, calling on Ram Ballabh Chakravarti to show cause why the order should not be set aside upon amongst other grounds that the proceedings were bad ab initio, as he had no interest in the property, being merely a servant, and that the proper parties were never before the Court.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chuckerbutty, for the petitioner.

Mr. P. L. Roy and Moulvi Serajul Islam, for the opposite party.

The judgment of the High Court (TREVELYAN and RAMPINI, JJ.), was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

In this case there can be no doubt that the proceedings are bad ab initio. The proceedings were instituted against Ram Ballabh Chakravarti, who happens to be the kurpurdaz of a Mahomedan lady and her children. We find that this Ram Ballabh was a party to the proceedings, and that the lady and her children were never made parties in any sense. But the dispute was really not between Ram Ballabh and the other side, but between this lady and her children on the one side and Newaz Ali on the other. We think that the original proceedings were bad and should be wholly set aside. If there is a dispute between this lady and the other side, and it is one likely to lead to breach of the peace, fresh proceedings may be instituted in a legal way.

[917] THE petitioner in this case and his co-sharers alleged that they were the owners in lakheraj right and in exclusive possession of a piece of land known as Purniata in mouza Malikara in pargana Katras in the district of Manbhoom. Mr. Darby was the manager of the Jheria and Katras Coal Company, who held leases of the sub-soil rights under one Purno Chunder Daw who was a lessee of Rajah Gunga Narain Singh of Katras.

It appeared that the Company claimed as lessees to be entitled to all sub-soil rights in respect of the whole mouza, whereas the petitioners denied that the Rajah, or any one claiming under him, had any right whatever in their lakheraj lands. The petitioner having started digging for coal in that land was stopped by people in the employ of Mr. Darby, and a breach of the peace being apprehended, the matter was reported to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate by the Sub-Inspector. These proceedings were thereupon instituted under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in which Behary Lall Trigunait was made the first party and Mr. Darby the second party. In these proceedings evidence was gone into before the Magistrate who delivered the following judgment:—

“The facts which gave rise to these proceedings are briefly these: One of the parties Behary Lall Trigunait started digging for coal in village Malikara, in pargana Katras, when he was [918] stopped by people in the employ of Mr. Darby, the manager employed by Messrs. Andrew Yule & Co., to work their coal fields in this district. A breach of the peace was apprehended, and the matter was reported for orders by the Sub-Inspector of Topchachi. Evidence on both sides has been gone into, and I have personally visited the scene, and have had Behary Trigunait to point out to me the old coal pits, which he alleges he dug. He has not been able, however, to show me the vestige of a pit. He tries to explain this by saying that the rains have filled them up: but he apparently forgets that the rains ended long before Magh last, when one of the pits is said to have been dug. There has been no rain since Magh, and the excuse is, therefore, impotent. Moreover the spots pointed out to me are in the bed of a streamlet, and even if one of them had been silted up by the stream in the rains, there would, at least, have been a hollow to mark the spot, or, at all events, a free deposit of sand. As a matter of fact, however, there is no hollow, no sand and not even the colour of coal; while, on the other hand, the outcrop which exhibits itself betrays that the coal is of extremely bad quality and too scant to work. In fact, there is no doubt that these old pits are nothing more than the product of an inventive imagination. A great deal has been said in argument about superficial possession, but the pleaders on both sides appear to have lost sight of the fact that the dispute is not about the surface but about the coal below. What I have to consider is the fact of possession of the coal. Now, it is not denied that Mr. Darby sunk inclines and extracted coal in January last, and those pits are visible and prominent now; on the other hand, I have already remarked that Behary Trigunait has failed to show me even a trace of any pit or incline made by him. The evidence adduced by him is wholly false, and its fictitious nature is exhibited by the fact that even the position of the alleged pits has been wrongly given by the witnesses. The places shewn me by the Trigunait are, as I have already remarked, in the bed of a streamlet; even positions are wrongly given. That Behary Trigunait has never taken possession of the sub-soil rights is beyond doubt; on the other hand the Rajah's enjoyment of the coaling rights is placed beyond doubt by the documents [919] filed, and Mr. Darby's possession of the coal is open to ocular demonstration. With rights I have nothing to do; but that Mr. Darby is in possession of the coal is manifest. I accordingly award possession of the coal in mouza Malikara to Mr. Darby and order Behary Lall Trigunait to refrain from touching or entering upon it until he shall have ousted Mr. Darby by law."

The petitioner then obtained a rule from the High Court on the opposite party to show cause why this order should not be set aside on the following grounds amongst others:—

That the Katras and Jheria Coal Co., the alleged lessees of the sub-soil rights in the mouza, not being made parties to the proceedings, and Mr. Darby, who was only the manager, having no personal interest in the matter, the proceedings were wholly void, and that underground or sub-soil rights could not rightly be the subject of proceedings under the section.

Numerous other objections were taken to the findings of the Magistrate, but it is not material to notice them for the purpose of this report.

Mr. M. Ghose and Mr. J. G. Apcar, appeared in support of the rule.

Mr. G. S. Henderson, showed cause.

JUDGMENT.

We think that this rule must be made absolute, and that it is enough for us to say that it must be made absolute, because the persons interested are not before the Court. Mr. Darby, in whose favour this order has been made, in his written statement, states that the property in question belongs to a Coal Company, and that his position is that of a manager of the Company. He does not state that he has any interest except as manager, and does not state that he has any independent, or in fact any, possession, except as representing the Company on whose behalf he is managing the mine. We do not think that that kind of possession is a possession such as is contemplated by this section, or, as I said just now, that the parties interested are properly before us. For these reasons we make the rule absolute.

boundaries to land in which the accused were charged with rioting, trespass, mischief and theft, and where, in the course of such investigation, he held a local enquiry extending over five days, during which he made a number of notes and appeared to have made a very careful and conscientious investigation of the locality, such as would properly be made by a person whose duty it was to get at the facts with a view to lay the same before some tribunal, and during such investigation it appeared that he acquired a large amount of information with reference to the occurrence on which he had to arrive at a judicial determination, but which, by reason of the way it was acquired, he could not properly or legally consider in arriving at an ultimate decision of the case, (such information not being guarded by the safeguards by which statements on which a Judge or a Magistrate exercising judicial functions can act must be guarded), and where it was suggested that the notes so made should be put on the record, and the Assistant Magistrate tender himself while trying the case as a witness to be cross-examined by either the prosecution or the defence:

Held, that such a course could not be allowed, and that the Assistant Magistrate ought not to try the case, but that it must be transferred to some other Magistrate exercising first class powers for disposal.

Powers of Magistrates to hold local investigations and the nature of such investigations discussed.

Whenever it is desirable for a Magistrate to view the place at which an occurrence, the subject-matter of a judicial investigation before him, has taken place, he should be careful to confine himself to such a view of the place as to enable him to understand the evidence placed before him, and should take care that no information reaches him with reference to the occurrence which he has to investigate beyond what he acquires by that view, and if the place of the occurrence be in dispute he would be wise in postponing his visit till all the evidence has been recorded, if under such circumstances he feels disposed to visit it at all.

[921] But where a local enquiry by a Magistrate takes the form of an investigation into the occurrence on the site of the occurrence instead of in his own Court, and he takes evidence on the spot, such evidence should not be recorded unless it is protected by all the safeguards by which evidence, on which a Judge may act, is protected by law.

THIS was a rule to show cause why a case pending before the Assistant Magistrate of Mymensingh, who exercised second class powers, should not be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate exercising first class powers on the ground of the complexity of the case. The facts which gave rise to the application being made to the High Court were as follows: It appeared that for a considerable period there had been a dispute existing between Rani Hemanta Kumari Devi and the Maharaja of Nattore and their respective predecessors in title regarding the boundaries of their lands and of certain forests in the sub-division of Tangail adjoining each other, and that these disputes had from time to time led to the institution of criminal proceedings.

In February and March 1893 timber in both forests appeared to have been cut, and thereafter various complaints were made. On the 27th November 1893 the complaints which gave rise to the present proceedings were made by Abdul Baki Miah, a servant of the Maharajah, before Babu Shib Chunder Nag, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail, charging Hari Kishore Mitra, and a large number of others in the service of the Rani with offences under ss. 147, 379, 426 and 447 of the Penal Code, viz., rioting, theft, mischief and criminal trespass. On the complaint being made, the complainant was examined on oath, and the Magistrate passed the following order: "There have been disputes going on for some time and cases are pending regarding similar matters and are under enquiry. There are questions of right of all sorts connected with the disputes. Complainant to prove his case first on the 9th December 1893."

On the 11th December 1893, Abdul Baki Miah presented a petition to Mr. Earle, the District Magistrate of Mymonsingh, stating, amongst other things, that Babu Shib Chunder Nag was inclined to view all cases instituted by the Maharajah's men in the light of merely contested civil cases, and that it was desirable [922] and necessary for the ends of justice that the cases should be tried by some other magistrate, and asking for a local enquiry and for the seizure of the timber that might be found on the enquiry, and for the transfer of the case to the file of some other magistrate.

Thereupon Mr. Earle recommended a local enquiry to be held by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail himself, and suggested that, pending his arrival at the place of occurrence, the timber might be inspected by the Police Inspector. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate then forwarded the order to the Police Inspector for the necessary steps to be taken, and the latter having made an enquiry on the spot submitted his report on the 29th December 1893.

Previous to the submission of that report, viz., on the 20th December, Babu Shib Chunder Nag made over the case to Munshi Sujab Ali, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Tangail, for trial, and on the 6th January 1894, the latter official ordered warrants to issue without bail for the arrest of some 21 persons referred to in the petition of complaint on charges under ss. 379 and 411 of the Penal Code, and on the same day passed an order directing the Police to seize the timber and stack it in the compound at the Police outpost.

On the 9th January 1894 the Rani's people communicated by telegram with Mr. Earle complaining of the orders of the 6th, and the latter replied that he was enquiring into the matter, and called on Babu Shib Chunder Nag to explain why he could not take up the case himself and to give the reason for the orders framed by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. Further correspondence then appears to have passed, and on the 17th January Mr. Earle directed the issue of the warrants to be stopped and made over the case to Mr. Radice, an Assistant Magistrate with second class powers.

That order was in the following terms :—

"The issue of warrants in the case in question is hereby prohibited, as also the seizure of timbers. The case, as also another case which I understand is pending as regards the forest timber, is made over to Mr. Radice, Assistant Magistrate, who will take them up de novo on the spot. He will have perfect liberty to issue such process and pass such orders as he considers legal after [923] perusal of all the papers, and also, if he likes, local investigation. The cases are between big zemindars and the value of the property concerned is not small. Further the cases may involve difficult questions which I do not consider the Sub-Deputy Magistrate is the proper person to deal with. If any orders have been passed by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate in the other case, the name of which is not specified, they are to be considered as cancelled. Mr. Radice having a full hand to deal with the case * * * I should have put a first class Magistrate in charge of these cases if it had been possible but I find it is impossible."

On the 21st January Mr. Radice reached the locality, and on the 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th and 26th he proceeded to hold a local enquiry at which the accused persons were alleged not to have been present. During that enquiry it appeared that Mr. Radice made a number of notes, the nature of which appears from the judgment of the High Court, and it was alleged on the part of the accused that at the time of holding the enquiry he had shown that he had even then formed an opinion adverse to them.

On the 25th January Mr. Radice passed an order directing the accused to appear before him on the 12th February.

On the 8th February an application was made to Mr. Earle on behalf of the accused, asking that the case should be made over to some Magistrate with first class powers on account of its importance and of the difficult questions that were likely to arise in it, but this application was refused.

On the 13th March the accused were brought up before Mr. Radice, and on that day and the following, and again on the 3rd April, some witnesses were examined on behalf of the prosecution in chief only and two of the accused were examined. On the latter date the further hearing was adjourned till the 18th April, and Mr. Radice intimated that he would again visit the locality on the 15th April.

It further appeared that on the 8th February 1894 an application had been made by the accused for copies of the proceedings, order sheet, notes, memos, and depositions which had been made and recorded by Mr. Radice while holding the local enquiry, and that on the 9th February Mr. Radice had passed the following order: "Grant copies of everything on the record of the [924] case," and the accused thereafter obtained copies of everything that had been made part of the record.

On the 3rd April 1894 a further petition was put in on behalf of the accused, stating that they had obtained copies of the daily proceedings in connection with the local enquiry, which had been made part of the record, and praying that if Mr. Radice had made any separate notes or memoranda which had not been made part of the record, he would be pleased to make such memoranda part of the record, so that the accused might have an opportunity of seeing them. This petition was presented in Court by Mr. W. C. Ghose on behalf of the accused, and, as stated in the petition of the accused to the High Court, the following is what then transpired:—

"Mr. Ghose said that he did not know whether there was any other note besides the one that formed part of the record, and that if there was any such note he prayed that he might be allowed an inspection of it.

"Mr. Radice said that he thought he had made all notes part of the record, and that he would presently make an enquiry.

[At this stage the Peshkar, on being asked, handed over to Mr. Radice some notes saying that they had not been made part of the record.]

"Mr. Radice then went through the notes himself, and after considering for a few minutes told Mr. Ghose that the part of the notes which contained facts found by him would be made part of the record, but that the remaining portion which contained his opinions he would keep away. Mr. Ghose thereupon said that he was entitled to see the whole of the notes and he prayed that he might be allowed to do so.

"Mr. Radice then said that he had recorded his opinions in preparation for writing his judgment. Mr. Ghose answered, saying, that surely at that stage the Court ought not to have formed any opinion, and he prayed that he might be allowed to see the whole of the notes.

"Mr. Radice thereupon said that he might change his opinion. Mr. Ghose then again prayed that he might be allowed to see the whole of the notes. That thereupon the said Mr. Radice, without allowing the said

Mr. Ghose to see the notes, recorded the [925] following order on the said petition presented by Mr. Ghose, viz., 'I may put in as much of the notes as is observation of fact and not opinion or inference drawn by me; but must in any case consider what I will put in and what not.'"

On the 4th April 1894, another petition was filed on behalf of the accused for certified copies of the notes and memoranda made by Mr. Radice, in addition to those on the record, and also a copy of the petition filed by the defence the day before together with the order passed thereon; and on the 5th April 1894 Mr. Radice passed the following order: "Ask Mr. Ghose to see me about this." Mr. Ghose appeared to have seen Mr. Radice on the same day in Chambers and verbally prayed that copies of the whole of his notes might be granted, but did not succeed in his prayer; and the following further order was then passed on the petition the same day: "Grant copy of petition. As to copies of my notes I will pass orders on the 16th. Put up them."

On the 13th April 1894 this application was made to the High Court. It was alleged that under the circumstances it would be necessary to call Mr. Radice as a witness for the defence, and affidavits were put in to show that he had not only formed an opinion adverse to the accused, but had recorded such adverse opinion in the notes referred to with a view to base his judgment thereon, and that consequently a fair and impartial trial could not be expected from him. It was further urged as a ground for a transfer that what Mr. Radice had done was in fact to take part in collecting evidence for the prosecution during the local enquiry, and therefore he ought not to try the case, and also that the case was one of such complexity that it should be tried by a Magistrate exercising first class powers.

A rule was issued on the latter ground, and Mr. Radice submitted an explanation and sent up the notes referred to. The purport of that explanation and the nature of the contents of the notes appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court.

Mr. Jackson and Babu Promotho Nath Sein, appeared in support of the rule.

Mr. W. C. Bonnerjee, Babu Srish Chunder Chowdhry and Mr. K. N. Chowdhry, showed cause.

[926] The following judgments were delivered by the High Court (PETHERAM, C. J., and RAMPINI, J.):—

JUDGMENTS.

PETHERAM, C.J.—The Maharajah of Nattore and Rani Hemanta Kumari Devi are the owners of forests in the Sub-Division of Tangail, which adjoin each other, and there have been for a long time disputes between them, and the persons who claim under them, as to the boundary line between their properties, which have from time to time led to the institution of criminal proceedings. On the 27th November 1893, Abdul Baki Miah, a servant of the Maharajah, laid a complaint before Babu Shib Chunder Nag, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Tangail, charging the petitioners, who are tenants and servants of the Rani, with having, on the 25th and 26th of the same month, been guilty of the offences of rioting, criminal trespass, mischief and theft. The complainant was examined on oath before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, who on the same day made an order that there were questions of right of all sorts connected with the disputes, and that the complainant should prove his case first on the 9th of December. On the 11th of December the complainant petitioned the District Magistrate to remove the case from the file of Babu Shib Chunder Nag to that of some other Magistrate, on the ground that that officer was inclined to view all cases instituted by the Maharajah's men in the light of contested civil cases; and on the 17th of January 1894 the District Magistrate, after a good deal of correspondence and consideration, made over the case to Mr. Radice, an Assistant Magistrate, with orders that he should commence the trial de novo and on the spot. Mr. Radice reached the place on the 21st of January, and was engaged on the 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th and 26th on a local enquiry, in the course of which he made a good many notes. He has sent these notes to this Court under cover, and they indicate that he made on those days a very careful and conscientious investigation of the locality, such as would properly be made by a person whose duty it was to get at the facts with a view to lay them before some tribunal, but the information which he sought and obtained was not guarded by the safeguards by which statements on which a Judge or Magistrate exercising judicial functions can act must be guarded. On the 13th of March the accused persons were brought [927] up before Mr. Radice, and on that and the next day, and again on the 3rd of April, to which day the trial seems to have been adjourned, witnesses were examined for the prosecution, and two of the accused were examined by the Magistrate. The enquiry was then adjourned to the 18th, and Mr. Radice intimated that he would again visit the place on the 15th. On the 3rd an application was made to Mr. Radice on behalf of the accused, that all notes and memoranda which he had made in the course of the investigation might be made part of the record, and that the parties might have copies of them. A good deal of discussion took place on the subject, and on the 5th Mr. Radice made this order: "Grant copy of petition. As to copies of my notes I will pass orders on the 16th. Put up them." On the 13th this rule was obtained from this Court, at the instance of the accused, to transfer the case from the file of the Assistant Magistrate to that of a Magistrate exercising first class powers, on the ground of the complexity of the case.

Mr. Radice has submitted an explanation to this Court, in which he tells us, amongst other things, that a transfer of the case from his file would cause great waste of time, and submits that a transfer is not necessary. With reference to the local enquiry he says: "Mr. Earle, the Magistrate, refused to transfer this case from my file (I was then Assistant Magistrate with second class powers) to that of a Magistrate with first class powers. I had consulted Mr. Earle on the advisability of transferring this case from my file, on the ground of my having conducted the local enquiry, and that either side might desire to call me as a witness. It was decided that as I had prepared full and careful notes of everything done at the local enquiry it would be sufficient if I were to put in these notes as evidence, and invite both parties to cross-examine me thereon." I have looked at some of the evidence which has been taken in the case, and I must say that if such an amount of evidence and such an elaborate local enquiry was necessary to determine whether the timber was grown on the land of the Maharajah or on that of the Rani, it seems unfortunate that the District Magistrate should have removed the case from the file of Babu Shib Chunder Nag for the reason assigned, as if it is the case that the question between the zemindars is one of such complication and difficulty, [928] it could hardly be possible to convict the servants of either of them of crime, for taking, by the orders of his master, timber which his master claimed as his own; and at first I was disposed to discharge this rule, on the ground that the local enquiry was not necessary at all, and that it would be enough for us to send the case back to Mr. Radice, with a direction to try the question whether crime had been committed, and not to endeavour in such a case to decide questions of title or boundary. On further consideration, however, I have come to the conclusion that we cannot allow Mr. Radice to proceed further with the trial of this case, and I have been forced to that conclusion mainly by what he has himself said in his explanation to this Court. Mr. Radice evidently considers the local investigation to have been of the greatest importance, and he feels, and no doubt properly, that he is not in a position to act judicially upon the information which he obtained in the course of it; but he thinks, after consultation with the District Magistrate, that the difficulty caused by the mode in which the local enquiry was conducted may be avoided by his putting in his notes as evidence, and by his allowing either the prosecution or the defence to cross-examine him upon them. It is in my opinion absolutely impossible for us to countenance anything of the kind. Such a proceeding is not contemplated by any provision to be found in the written law of this country, and is one which I think must have a tendency to shake the confidence of the people in the administration of justice. It may be that there are cases in which it is desirable that a judicial officer should see the place in which an occurrence which is the subject of a judicial investigation before him has taken place, in order to enable him to understand the evidence which is laid before him, but when an officer visits a place for this purpose he should take care that no information reaches him with reference to the occurrence which he is to investigate beyond what he acquires from the view of the place, and when there is a dispute as to the exact spot in which the occurrence is said to have taken place, he will be wise to defer his visit to the spot until he has heard the whole of the evidence, if under such circumstances he feels disposed to visit it at all. There may also be another kind of local enquiry which an officer may sometimes be called upon to hold. [929] I mean an enquiry which, for the sake of convenience, he holds at the place where the occurrence took place, and not in his own Court; but such an enquiry, wherever it is held, is the trial of the case, and no evidence can be received at it, unless it is protected by all the safeguards by which evidence on which a Judge may act is protected by law. It is evident that the local enquiry held by Mr. Radice in this case was something very different from either of these, and was one in which he acquired a large amount of information with reference to the occurrence on which he had to arrive at a judicial determination, which, by reason of the mode in which he had acquired it, he cannot properly and legally consider in arriving at his ultimate decision. I do not believe it would be possible for any man in coming to a conclusion of fact under such circumstances, to separate the evidence which was properly before him from the information he had acquired on the spot, so that he could say that his mind was not influenced by such information, and when the officer tells us, as he does here, that he has acquired such information, I think it is impossible for us to allow him to proceed with the trial. I wish to add that though Mr. Radice has fallen into this error with reference to the nature of a local inquiry when held by a judicial officer in the course of a judicial enquiry, his notes of the local enquiry and of the evidence taken before him indicate to my mind a conscientious desire on his part to spare himself no trouble, but to make the investigation entrusted to him as complete and at the same time as fair as possible.

The rule will be made absolute to remove the case from his file to that of some Magistrate of the first class, but the selection of the particular officer must rest with the District Magistrate.

RAMIPINI, J.—I agree with the learned Chief Justice that this rule must, for the reasons assigned by him, be made absolute. I further agree with him in considering that the Assistant Magistrate who entered on the local enquiry made by him only under the orders of his superior officer, the District Magistrate, has throughout acted conscientiously and exhibited an anxious desire to deal fairly with both parties to this litigation. But the fact of his having made the local enquiry he did make, in which [930] he collected information with regard to the boundary between the Maharajah's and the Rani's properties and the cutting of the logs, and in which he actually searched for and found some of the logs claimed as stolen property, renders it impossible for him to try this case judicially. The suggestion which he makes after consultation with the District Magistrate that he should enter the witness-box and be examined and cross-examined by the pleaders of the parties is one which it is impossible, and which it would be illegal, for him to carry out. It has been frequently ruled by this Court that when a Judge is the sole judge, both of law and fact, he cannot give evidence before himself [see Empress v. Donnelly (1).] Further I may point out that there is no section of the Criminal Procedure Code which authorizes a Magistrate to make such a local investigation into a case tried by himself as was made by the Assistant Magistrate in this case. Section 148 provides that the District Magistrate or Sub-Divisional Magistrate may direct some other Magistrate, subordinate to him, to make a local enquiry in a case of a dispute likely to cause breach of the peace regarding tangible immoveable property, and that the report of such Magistrate may be read as evidence in the case. Section 202 authorizes a Magistrate when, after examining a complainant, he sees reason to distrust the truth of the complaint to postpone issuing process against the accused, and either to enquire into the case himself, or direct a previous local investigation to be made by any officer subordinate to him, or by a police officer, or by such other person, not being a Magistrate or police officer, as he sees fit. Section 293 directs that in the course of a sessions trial, when it is considered desirable that the jury or assessors should view the place where the offence is alleged to have been committed, they may be conducted to the place under the care of an officer of the Court, and when the view is finished they must immediately be conducted back into Court, without being allowed to speak to any one. These are the only sections of the Criminal Procedure Code which allow of local investigations and local inspections, and it is clear that the sort of local enquiry made by the Assistant Magistrate in this case was not one contemplated or [931] authorized by any of them. It is very desirable, I think, that Magistrates should bear these sections in mind when pressed, as they constantly are, to make local investigations into cases coming judicially before them.

RAM BRAHMA SIRCAR AND OTHERS (Petitioners) v. CHANDRA
KANTA SHAH (Opposite-party).^{*} [11th June, 1894.]

Revision—Criminal Cases—Power of High Court in Revisional Cases—Power to go into case on facts—Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 439.

Under s. 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, the High Court has power to consider the facts of a case in revision.

THE petitioners in this case were charged before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Meherpore with offences under ss. 147, 379, and 109 of the Penal Code, and were all convicted, Ram Brahma Sircar being sentenced to six months and the others to five months rigorous imprisonment.
Against this conviction there was an appeal to the District Magistrate who altered the conviction to one under ss. 143 and 379 but upheld the sentence.

The petitioners then moved the High Court under the revisional section to send for the record and quash the convictions on the following grounds:—

(1) That under the circumstances of the case the petitioners were not members of an unlawful assembly, and therefore not guilty under
s. 143;

(2) That there was nothing in the case to show any common object;

(3) That there was nothing in the facts proved to show that theft had been committed; and

(4) That upon the facts proved, and under the circumstances of the case, the sentences passed were unduly severe.

[932] The facts of the case are fully stated in the judgment of the High Court. The only questions argued at the hearing of the rule were that the facts disclosed no intention on the part of the accused to do anything unlawful; that there was no evidence of any theft or common object, and that the conviction under neither section could therefore be maintained.

Mr. M. Ghose and Babu Haraprosad Chatterjee, for the petitioners.

The Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Leith), for the Crown.

The judgment of the High Court (PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

The accused in this case have been convicted under the provisions of ss. 143 and 379 of the Penal Code and sentenced, the principal accused, Ram Brahma Sircar, to six months, and the remaining six accused to five months rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The complainant Chandra Kanta Shah is a trader, and on the 12th March last he wished to send certain bags of linseed from Boalia, where he lived, to Calcutta. He engaged some carts to convey his bags, and on the morning of the day of the occurrence he sent twenty bags of linseed across the river, on the west bank of which he resided, to the east bank, where the carts, which were to convey his goods and those of another trader, were collected. The complainant says that on the evening of the day before the occurrence "the naib's master, Mani Babu (that is, the master of the principal accused Ram Brahma Sircar) had demanded a larger nazar than Rs. 2 from us. Rs. 2 had been taken, but the naib had said he would levy Rs. 2 from every shop-keeper in the bazar. I would not pay the two rupees, and in the evening of that day he sent some men to take me to cutcherry. This was the day before the day of the occurrence." On the following morning, according to the complainant, after his twenty sacks of linseed had been taken across the river, Ali Sheikh, a barkandaz, and one of the accused, came from Ram Brahma's cutcherry to the east bank and then went away. He then came back and called the ferryman Madhu Patni and two of the cartmen, who had been assisting the coolies [933] in loading the carts, to the accused's arat which is on the west bank of the river. The complainant followed them there, upon which the accused Ram Brahma said to the ferryman, "you must not take the goods of Chandra Shah and Goda Dhar Shah across the river," and to the cartmen, "you must not bring your carts on my land, take them away and be off." The ferryman then said he would not take any more of the complainant's bags of linseed across the river. The naib Ram Brahma and two others then went to the ghat, crossed in the ferryboat to the east side, and told the barkandaz Ali Sheikh, to take the carts, which were loaded with the complainant's bags of linseed, to the cutcherry which, according to the witness Umed Sheikh, is on the east side of the river. On Ram Brahma's ordering the carts to be taken to the cutcherry, Ali barkandaz said, "I cannot take them alone." The naib then said, "bring the barkandazes and halsanas from the cutcherry." Ali Sheikh accordingly went to the cutcherry, and returned with the other accused and others, about five or seven in number, and took away all the carts that were there in spite of the remonstrances of the cartmen. Subsequently the complainant complained at the thannah, and the Sub-Inspector of Police came and found fourteen carts near the cutcherry. They were, he says, "not at the place where carts usually stand on the side of the ghat," but they were on or near the road leading to Alumdanga. Some nine sacks of linseed were found on the carts, and some 61 sacks were found on the west bank of the river. The complainant admits that he recovered these nine sacks of linseed found by the Sub-Inspector. He does not say explicitly whether or not he got back the remaining thirteen sacks out of the twenty that had been taken to the east bank, but the cartman Umed Sheikh says that "the sacks taken away with the carts have not been recovered."

Now, on these facts the Assistant Magistrate convicted the accused of theft and rioting. The District Magistrate on appeal affirmed the conviction under s. 379, but altered the conviction of rioting into one of unlawful assembly under s. 143.

Mr. Ghose, on behalf of the appellants, has argued that the conviction under neither section can be sustained, inasmuch as [934] the accused had no intention of taking possession of the bags of linseed, or of doing anything unlawful. They merely desired, he contends, to remove the carts from the land of the accused's master, where they were being loaded without his permission.

We have examined the evidence in this case with care, and on the whole we do not think that there is sufficient evidence to shew that the accused wished to take the goods of the complainant out of his possession and into their own. There is no evidence to show that they have had anything to do with the disappearance of the bags of linseed which have not been recovered. The fact that the Sub-Inspector of Police found nine bags of linseed still loaded on the carts shows that the accused had no wish to retain possession of these bags. We think we may therefore acquit them of the offence of theft, of which they have been convicted; but we think the conviction of the offence of unlawful assembly should be sustained. The accused clearly assembled to prevent the complainant and his cartmen doing what they were legally entitled to do, viz., to take the carts of linseed along the road to Alumdanga and Calcutta. Mr. Ghose has told us that this road is a public one. Why they acted in this way is not so apparent. It may be inferred that they did so because the complainant had not paid the extra Rs. 2 which had been demanded from him the previous evening. However this may be, after his goods had been taken across the ferry and loaded on the carts on the east bank, the accused had no right to stop the carts from going along the public road for any reason, and the accused, when they assembled armed with lathies (as according to the witness Banko Behari they were) and seized and moved the carts as they did, had undoubtedly a common object of an unlawful nature. We therefore think the conviction under s. 143 of the Penal Code must be sustained.

We, however, consider that the sentence passed in this case is unduly and unnecessarily severe, and would have been so, even if the accused had been properly convicted of theft. We are told the accused have undergone about sixteen days rigorous imprisonment. We think this is sufficient for the requirements of justice in this case, and we will reduce the sentence accordingly.

We must, before concluding, allude to an observation made by [935] the District Magistrate in his letter of explanation with regard to this case. He has said that this Court in revision has only to determine questions of law and has no jurisdiction to determine questions of fact. He cites a case [In the matter of the petition of Debi Churn Biswas (1)] in support of this observation. This case, however, was decided under the old Criminal Procedure Code, Act X of 1872, the provisions of ss. 294 and 297 of which were different from those of s. 439 of the present Code. The powers of this Court to consider the facts of a case in revision are apparent from the terms of the section, and this has been held in numerous decisions of this Court. We may cite the passage at p. 618 of the case of Hari Dass Sanyal v. Saritulla (2) as explicitly dealing with this question.

For these reasons, then, we set aside the conviction of the accused under s. 379 of the Penal Code. We affirm their conviction under s. 143, and we reduce the sentence of imprisonment passed on them to such period as they may have already undergone.

HAZAREE (Petitioner).^{*} [27th June, 1894.]

Second appeal—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 106, 108—Special Judge, order of—Boundary dispute—Bengal Survey Act (Bengal Act V of 1875), Part V, s. 40—Settlement Officer acting as Survey Officer.

A second appeal only lies to the High Court under s. 108 of the Bengal Tenancy Act from the decision of the Special Judge in a case under s. 106 of the Act. No second appeal, therefore, lies from an order of the Special Judge dismissing an appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him in a case of a boundary dispute which had been tried and decided by [936] a Settlement Officer acting as a Survey Officer under Part V of the Bengal Survey Act (Bengal Act V of 1875).

The Court declined to interfere under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code, being of opinion that the Settlement Officer had power under s. 189 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and Rule 1, chap. VI of the Government rules under the Tenancy Act, to act as he had done, and that therefore in holding that no appeal lay to him the Special Judge had not refrained from exercising any jurisdiction which he ought to have exercised.

THE proceeding which gave rise to this appeal was a petition headed "Case of boundary dispute No. 5 of 1892-93," and filed in the Court of the Settlement Officer of Chittagong by Kanta Pershad Hazaree for a determination of the boundary between his estate in mouza Burmacharn and mouza Toiladip. Notice of the application was served on Irshad Ali Chowdhry, who was in possession of taluk Jinnat Ali Khan (which was the portion of mouza Toiladip contiguous to the land of Kanta Pershad Hazaree) as auction-purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue held in March 1888.

Irshad Ali Chowdhry made a number of objections to the petition, of which the following only are material to this report, namely, that the case being one for determination of boundaries had not been brought in the proper Court; that in such a case he should not have been made a party; that the Survey Superintendent and Settlement Officers had already determined the boundaries of his (the objector's) land, and the record of rights had been effected thereon, and the Court was therefore not competent to deal with the matter again; that as the case had not been brought under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act it ought not to be heard by the Court; and that the petitioner had no right to the land claimed by him.

The case came before the Assistant Settlement Officer of Chittagong, who, finding that the boundary had been already settled in a former proceeding between Arsad Ali Khan, the former proprietor of taluk Jinnat Ali Khan, and the petitioner Kanta Pershad Hazaree, by the Judge of Chittagong, on the 7th July 1884, and that nothing new had been made out in the present case to justify the adoption of a different boundary, decided the case in favour of the petitioner.

On a petition of appeal to the Settlement Officer, the case was [937] referred to the Assistant Settlement Officer for report "whether it was a summary decision of an objection, or a judgment in a regular dispute case under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act," on which the Assistant Settlement Officer made the following order, dated 23rd September 1892 :—

" This is not a dispute raised under s. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but one for laying down the boundary between the two mehals named above, and which had already been determined by Courts of competent jurisdiction. It was entered in the register of boundary disputes kept under Part V of the Bengal Survey Act, and the procedure followed in its disposal was that prescribed by that Act."

The objector Irshad Ali Chowdhry appealed to the Special Judge of Chittagong, before whom an objection was taken that no appeal lay. As to this the Judge said :—

" A preliminary objection has been made to the effect that no appeal lies to this Court, sitting as a Special Judge under chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is admitted and proved that appellant's appeal to the Settlement Officer, who is the Superintendent of Survey under Bengal Act V of 1875, has been duly dismissed. Section 59 (c) of the Survey Act provides for appeals from decisions in boundary disputes ; and s. 62 provides for a civil suit to be thereafter instituted. Clearly this Court has no jurisdiction ; nor does the decision of the Assistant Settlement officer, who mistakenly designates himself as such, purport to be under the Tenancy Act. It is specially headed ' boundary dispute.' No doubt there has been a transference of plots, but that was for the information of the Survey Department, and correction of the maps. I am referred to the Settlement Manual, p. 8, chap. II, paragraph 19. But s. 108, Act VIII of 1885, allows appeals from the decisions of Revenue Officers under chap. X of that Act, and not under the Survey Act. Appellant himself has recognized the fact by going up to the superior authorities in the Survey Department. I express no opinion upon the question whether the proceedings ought to have been regulated by the Bengal Tenancy Act. They were not so regulated, and I therefore give my judgment for respondent with costs. The appeal is dismissed. I allow no costs to the Secretary of State, as he was no party to the appeal, and the Government pleader contented himself with observing that no appeal lay."

From this decision Irshad Ali Chowdhry appealed to the High Court, mainly on the grounds that the Special Judge was wrong in holding that the case was one under Bengal Act V of 1875, and that therefore no appeal lay to him ; that the application having been made in the course of proceedings [938] under the Bengal Tenancy Act disputing the correctness of the boundary laid down in respect of his farming lease, and having been entertained by him as a Settlement Officer, and not as Assistant Superintendent of Survey, the Judge should have held that an appeal lay from the decision of the Settlement Officer under chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act ; that the Judge should have held that the first Court did not act as Assistant Superintendent of Survey, nor was he authorized to entertain the application under that Act.

The judgment of the Court (HILL and RAMPINI, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is a second appeal against an order of the Special Judge of Chittagong, who has rejected an appeal against an order of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Chittagong on the ground that no appeal lies to him. On behalf of the appellant, it is contended that the order of the Assistant Settlement Officer was passed under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that it was ultra vires, being a decision as to a boundary dispute between neighbouring proprietors of land, and that, therefore, it should have been set aside by the Special Judge.

A preliminary objection to the hearing of this second appeal has been urged on the ground that no appeal lies to this Court. We are of opinion that this contention must prevail. A second appeal only lies to this Court under s. 108 (3) against a decision of the Special Judge in a case under s. 106, and it is clear that the decision of the Special Judge in this case, which it is sought to set aside, is not a decision under s. 106, because it is not a decision about the correctness of an entry in the record of rights.

Then it is said that we should regard this appeal as an application under s. 622 of the Civil Procedure Code. But we are unable to do so, because we do not think that the Special Judge [939] has refrained from exercising any jurisdiction which he ought to have exercised. The Settlement Officer's order, which the Special Judge declined to interfere with, was, we think, passed by him under his powers as a Survey Officer with which he is vested under s. 189 (b) and Rule 1, chap. VI of the Government Rules made under the Tenancy Act. He himself says in an order, dated 23rd September 1892, which is to be found on the record that his order is one under Part V of the Bengal Survey Act, (Bengal Act V of 1875), and s. 40 of that Act, which is the first section of Part V, authorises him to dispose of such a boundary dispute as he has decided in this case. We, therefore, do not think that he was dealing with the case under the Tenancy Act, and accordingly the decision of the Special Judge now appealed against is right.

Sir Griffith Evans relies on the fact that the Settlement Officer has described himself as such and not as a Survey Officer, and also on Rule 33, p. 8, of the Board's Survey Manual, in which it is laid down that, under s. 106, a Settlement Officer may decide disputes between two disputing landlords, unless the estates of one of them should lie without the limits of the area under settlement, which is not the case, it is said, in the present instance.

But this rule has not the force of law, and the Settlement Officer himself says his proceeding was one under Part V of the Survey Act. It is a well known rule that when a judicial officer has powers to do certain things, it is to be presumed that, when he does these things, he was acting under these powers, though he may not expressly say so.

We, therefore, see no reason for interfering in this case. As the Special Judge points out, the appellant has still the remedy of a regular civil suit open to him.

We dismiss the appeal with costs.

On the 8th February 1894 the sale proclamation was published, and on the 26th March the sale was held. On the 17th April 1894 the judgment-debtor applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 310-A of the Code of Civil Procedure (which section was added to the Code by Act V of 1894, and which came into operation on the 2nd March 1894) to have the sale set aside on payment to the auction-purchaser of 5 per cent. on the purchase money and to the decree-holder of the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation. The auction-purchaser resisted the application on the ground that the section could not affect the sale in question.

Held (PETHERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., dissenting) that the section conferred a new and substantive right on the judgment-debtor and was not merely a matter of procedure; and that as Act V of 1894 does not clearly indicate the intention of the Legislature that it was meant to have retrospective effect, the section had no application to pending proceedings, and the judgment-debtor was not entitled to have the sale set aside under its provisions.

Held, per PETHERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., that the section merely dealt with a matter of procedure and applied to the sale which the judgment-debtor was entitled to have set aside.

Per PETHERAM, C.J.—All that s. 310-A does, so far as the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are concerned, is to extend the period during which the latter may discharge his liability by 30 days beyond the date of the sale, and is merely a modification of the way in which the successful litigant may obtain the fruits of his decree; and even if it be considered as creating a new and substantive right in the judgment-debtor the words used by the Legislature in Act V of 1894 must be taken to [941] have been used with the express intention that the section should have a retrospective effect in the sense that it should take effect on sales held after the Act came into operation, though the execution proceedings, of which the sale was a part, had been commenced before the Act came into operation.

Per O'KINEALY, J.—Act XIV of 1882 is on the face of it an Act of procedure and nothing more, and what the Legislature intended to do by Act V of 1894 was to amend the rules of that Code with regard to the sale and delivery of property, and the section, both in form and substance, is merely a rule of procedure under which no party has a vested interest. In addition, as under s. 316 of the Code a purchaser has no vested interest in the property before the date of the certificate he could not insist on the sale being confirmed and a certificate being given him if the amount due by the judgment-debtor be paid in before that date.

(F.B.).

THIS was an application by a purchaser at a sale held in execution of a decree to have an order passed by the Munsif of Alipore annulling the sale set aside.

The decree was passed on the 5th January 1894 for Rs. 36 in a suit by Jogendra Nath Banerjee against Apurba Krishna Dass. On the 30th January 1894 execution was applied for and certain property was thereafter duly attached. On the 8th February 1894 the sale proclamation was duly published and the sale was held on the 26th March. The petitioner before the High Court, Girish Chundra Basu, became the purchaser of the property for Rs. 80, the property being sold subject to a mortgage for Rs. 600 with interest thereon.

On the 2nd March 1894 Act V of 1894 came into operation, and on the 17th April 1894 the judgment-debtor applied under s. 310-A of the Code of Civil Procedure which was added to the Code by that Act to have the sale set aside upon payment to the purchaser of 5 per cent. on the purchase-money and to the decree-holder of the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation.

The purchaser opposed the application, contending that s. 310-A could not apply to the sale, which was in execution of a [942] decree passed before the Act came into operation. The Munsif, however, held that the amending Act having come into operation at once applied to all pending sales, and overruling the objection made the order asked for.

The auction-purchaser then applied to the High Court for a rule to show cause why that order should not be set aside, on the ground that s. 310-A had no application to the case, and the Munsif had no jurisdiction to set aside the sale.

The application was made on the 3rd May 1894 by Babu Ashutosh Mukerjee to a Bench consisting of PETHERAM, C.J., and RAMPINI, J., and a rule was issued in the form asked for.

The rule was heard before a Full Bench.

Babu Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty showed cause.

Babu Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty took the preliminary objection that as there was an appeal from the Munsif's order the High Court should not interfere in its revisional jurisdiction, but the Court decided to hear the case on the merits.

Babu Ashutosh Mukerjee in support of the rule.—Upon the principles to be deduced from the three Full Bench decisions in Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1), Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (2), and Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (3) it cannot be held that Act V of 1894 applies to this sale. The first of these cases arose out of an application made under s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was held that the section created a new substantive right, and could not therefore, in the absence of express legislation, be applied to the case of a sale in execution of a decree the execution of which had been applied for before the Act came into force. In Uzir Ali's case the same section of the Bengal Tenancy Act was in question, and the same decision was given, it being held that the section was not a mere matter of procedure, but conferred a substantive right. In Deb Narain Dutt's case the question was whether s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied to a pending proceeding, and it was held that it did apply being a matter of [943] procedure, but the previous decision was referred to. It is clear, therefore, that s. 174 conferred a new and substantive right. The statement of objects and reasons to Act V of 1894 (Gazette of India, Part V, 11th March 1893, p. 60), shows that the Legislature intended to extend the provisions of s. 174 to other cases than those covered by the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it makes no difference whether the matter is inserted in the Civil Procedure Code or in the Bengal Tenancy Act. A new right is conferred. You must look at the essence of the enactment and not at the place where it is enacted. It is immaterial in what Act it stands. You must look at the section and see if it confers a new right or merely lays down a new procedure. There are other rights dealt with in the Code of Civil Procedure. Sections 13, 43 and 125 all deal with matters of right. Again, when the Legislature intends an enactment to apply to pending cases it specially enacts that it shall so apply. The Partition Act (IV of 1893) is a Procedure Act, but s. 10 provides that it is to apply to pending proceedings. There is no similar provision in Act V of 1894. The section in the Act confers a new right, and being added to a Procedure Code does not make it a mere matter of procedure. If the reverse had been enacted it could not have been contended that a right of the judgment-debtor had not been taken away. In the case of Anund Chunder Roy v. Nitai Bhoomij (1) it was held that an appeal newly given by law is applicable to proceedings instituted before that change in the procedure was made, the appeal being merely a matter of procedure, so that it is not enough to see where the section is found, but you have to look to what it relates. In Framji Bomanji v. Hormasji Barjorji (2), the same principle was adopted, though the new Act took away the right of appeal. The objection taken that this Court cannot interfere because an appeal lay from the Munsif's order is of no avail. My client is the purchaser and no party to the suit and could not therefore appeal.

(1) 14 C. 636.

(2) 15 C. 383.

(3) 16 C. 267.

Babu Issur Chunder Chuckerbutty.—Under s. 244, all questions that arise in execution of a decree can be decided, and in Prosunno Kumar Sanyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (3) it was [944] pointed out that the fact that a purchaser is interested and concerned in the result has never been held to prevent the application of that section. [O'KINEALY, J.—Has it ever been held that the purchaser can appeal? It has never been the practice. But he could be added a party, though no case shows he could appeal. The case of Asizan v. Matuk Lal Sahu (4) (see pp. 448 and 458) shows that a purchaser could appeal, as the matter is one which falls under s. 244, and that being so, he has no right to make this application under s. 622.

On the merits Act V of 1894 is termed an Act to amend the Code of Civil Procedure, and there is no justification for calling it an Act which deals with substantive law. The Code itself is merely an Act regulating procedure, and s. 13 and the other sections referred to do not deal with rights but only with matters of procedure. It was provided by Act V of 1894 that it should come into force at once, and it shows no intention on the part of the Legislature to limit its operation to cases arising after it was passed. It was evidently intended to apply to all pending cases. Its provisions merely extend the time within which the judgment-debtor can pay the amount due. It does not confer any new substantive right, but only prescribes the procedure for fixing the time within which the debt can be paid. The Full Bench cases cited on the other side have no application to this case. (See Wilberforce on Statute Law, p. 155, et seq.)

Babu Ashutosh Mookerjee in reply.

JUDGMENTS.

GHOSE, J.—The question raised in this rule is whether the provisions of Act V of 1894 are applicable to proceedings commenced before that Act came into operation. The decree in this case was pronounced on the 5th January 1894 : the application for sale in execution thereof was made on the 30th January ; the sale proclamation published in February 1894 ; and the sale was held on the 26th March 1894. In the meantime, i.e., on the [945] 2nd March 1894, the Act in question was passed and came into operation. The judgment-debtor, relying upon the provisions of s. 310-A, which by that Act was directed to be inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure, applied to the Court which had held the sale, to set it aside upon payment to the purchaser of a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money, and to the decree-holder the amount specified in the proclamation of sale ; and the Munsif has under that section set aside the sale. If the provisions of Act V of 1894 were intended to have retrospective effect, the Munsif was right in making the order he did ; otherwise the order was without any authority. As the law (Act XIV of 1882) stood before the said Act came into force, a person purchasing a property at an execution sale would be entitled to have the sale confirmed unless it were proved that there was material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, and that substantial injury was caused by reason of such irregularity (ss. 311 and 312). Act V of 1894 so far modified this provision as to provide and insert after s. 310 that “any person whose immovable property has been sold under this chapter may at any time, within thirty days from the date of sale, apply to have the sale set aside on his depositing in Court : (a) for payment to the purchaser a sum equal to five per centum of the purchase-money, and (b) for payment to the decree-holder the amount specified in the proclamation of sale as that for the recovery of which the sale was ordered, less any amount which may, since the date of such proclamation of sale, have been received by the decree-holder,” and that “if such deposit is made within thirty days the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale.” The Act (V of 1894) is entitled to be “an Act to amend the Code of Civil Procedure,” and it is stated that “it shall come into force at once.” Now I take the rule of construction in a matter like this to be, as it is stated by Wilson, J., in Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (1) and Tupsee Singh v. Ram Sarun Koeri (2) that “retrospective effect is not ordinarily given to an enactment so as to affect substantive rights, but that provisions affecting mere procedure are applied to pending proceedings,” and that “an enactment affecting [946] rights of property is not to be so construed as to give retrospective effect, unless the intention that it shall have such effect clearly appears.”

It has been contended that the provisions contained in the new s. 310-A are merely matters of procedure, that it finds its place in an Act which is a Code of Procedure, and that upon the wording of Act V of 1894 itself it is clear that it is intended to have retrospective effect. A question similar to this, so far as the first branch of the argument is concerned, was considered by two Full Benches of this Court in Lal Mohun Mukerjee

(1) 16 C. 267.

(2) 15 C. 376.

v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1) and Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (2). This was with reference to s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the language of which is very similar to that of s. 310-A of Act V of 1894; and it was held that s. 174 was not a mere matter of procedure, but conferred a new and substantive right, and that in the absence of any indication of intention that the provision was to operate retrospectively it did not, by the ordinary rules of construction, apply to proceedings under a decree passed before the Act came into operation. If the rule of law, laid down in these two cases, is to be followed, I do not see how it can be held in this case that s. 310-A is a matter merely of procedure, and does not confer upon a judgment-debtor a new and substantive right, which he did not possess under the Code as it stood before the amending Act was passed. It has, however, been said that the Act, in which s. 310-A has been incorporated, is merely a Code of Civil Procedure, and the section has been inserted in a chapter which deals with the execution of decrees, and lays down rules as to the sale of immoveable property; whereas s. 174 is a part of the law of landlord and tenant, which deals with matters of substantive right. It will, however, be found upon an examination of the Bengal Tenancy Act that it deals with procedure as well as substantive rights, and s. 174 finds a place in a chapter entitled "Sale for arrears under a decree," a chapter which, while it lays down what are "protected interests" and the power conferred upon a purchaser to annul encumbrances, prescribes certain [947] special procedure, for, and rules connected with, sales. And if a provision like that, which is contained in s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is not a matter of mere procedure, but confers a substantive right, I do not see how it can be held that, because it finds a place in a Code of Civil Procedure, it is nothing but procedure, and does not confer a substantive right. As I have already pointed out, in the event of a sale taking place under the Code of Civil Procedure, a purchaser is entitled (barring, of course, a case of fraud or other abuse of the process of the Court) to have the sale confirmed, unless it is proved that there has been a material irregularity in the publishing and conducting of the sale, and unless substantial injury has been occasioned by such irregularity. Section 312 of the Code says that "if no such application, as is mentioned in the last preceding section, be made, or if such application be made, and the objection be disallowed, the Court shall pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser," and so on. The words are "shall pass an order confirming the sale." Section 310-A, however, provides that, if within thirty days from the day of sale the judgment-debtor pays up the decree, and in addition a sum equal to 5 per centum upon the amount of the purchase money, the Court "shall pass an order setting aside the sale." I think, following the Full Bench decisions already referred to, that this provision does confer a substantive right upon the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside, and that in derogation of the right, imperfect though it may be, which the Code gives to a purchaser. This, I am disposed to think, is not a mere matter of procedure to which retrospective effect should be given. As to the argument derived from the language of the amending Act itself, I must confess that the matter is not free from difficulty, but, after the best consideration I have been able to give to it, I am inclined to think that the provisions of the Act are not clear enough to indicate that it was the intention of the Legislature that it should have retrospective effect. The Act no doubt provides that it shall come into force at once, that s. 310-A is to be inserted in the Civil Procedure Code, and that it applies to a sale held under this chapter; but these circumstances are not, to my mind, sufficient to indicate that the privilege conferred thereby upon a judgment-[948] debtor was intended to apply to a sale, the proceedings in relation to which had already been taken, "under the chapter" as it existed before s. 310-A was incorporated in it. I observe that where the Legislature have thought that an Act should have retrospective effect they have said so either in express words, or by clear implication, e.g., s. 10, Act IV of 1893, and s. 21 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Upon all these grounds I am of opinion that Act V of 1894 has no retrospective effect so as to apply to the sale in question.

TREVELYAN, J.—The question before us is whether Act V of 1894 has a retrospective effect and applies to proceedings in execution commenced before that Act came into force. There is in my opinion nothing on the face of the Act to show that the Legislature intended it to have a retrospective effect. There is an absence of express provision for retrospective operation such as is to be found in s. 10 of Act IV of 1893, and similar provision in other Acts. There are no words used which in any way indicate that the Legislature intended a retrospective effect. The phraseology of the section which is added by the Act in question to the Code of Civil Procedure is such as to fit into the Code and to be read with the other provisions of the Code. There is nothing in the words of the section which indicates an intention to do more than merely supplement the provisions of the Code. It has been so drawn as to be read into the Code, and its form has, in my opinion, that object only. That form has no reference to whether its operation is to be retrospective or only prospective. There are certain cases, such as those to be found at p. 165 of Wilberforce's Statute Law, 1st edition, where particular words have been held to show by implication that the Legislature intended retrospective operation to be given to the provisions of a Statute. I can find nothing of the kind here. Moreover, in considering this question, I think one is entitled to assume that the Legislature had in view the state of the authorities in this Court on this subject. The recent decisions of Full Benches of this Court on similar provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to which I shall presently refer, must be taken to have been in the contemplation of the Legislature; the more so, as since the decision of those cases, we find that [949] when they intend to give retrospective operation to an Act they do so in express terms.

There remains the question as to whether retrospective operation should be given to this enactment on the ground that it relates to procedure only. I do not think it necessary for us to examine this question as if it were "res integra." The matter is in my opinion concluded by authority. I fail to find any real distinction between the decisions of the Full Benches of this Court in the cases of Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1) and Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (2) and the present case. Section 174 of the Tenancy Act contains a provision similar to the one in Act V of 1894. In the case, Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (1) the Full Bench pointed out that that provision created a new right which judgment-debtors did not possess under the old Act. Similarly here, the new s. 310-A confers, upon judgment-debtors a new right which they did not possess under the Civil Procedure Code as unamended, as pointed out by the Full Bench in Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (1). The case of Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (2) held that s. 174 was not a matter of mere procedure, but conferred a substantive right. It is sought to distinguish these cases by the fact that the provisions of the Tenancy Act are in the main provisions of substance and not of procedure. This is to my mind no answer. Many Acts which are in the main Acts otherwise than of procedure deal also with matters of procedure. In the same way Acts of Procedure occasionally deal also with rights. It is always necessary to see whether the particular provision is one of mere procedure or dealing with rights. Two Full Benches have held that a section equivalent to the section in question is not a matter of mere procedure, but confers a substantive right. I think that until the Legislature deals with this matter we are bound to follow these decisions. I would make the rules absolute with costs.

(1) 14 C. 636.

(2) 15 C. 383.

(F.B.).

O'KINEALY, J.—This is a rule obtained by Girish Chundra Basu, the auction-purchaser at a sale held under the Civil Procedure Code, against the decree-holder and judgment-debtor, calling upon them to show cause why the decision of the Munsif [950] in the Court below, dated the 30th April 1894, declaring that s. 310A, which is a new section added to the Procedure Code by Act V of 1894, did not apply to the sale, should not be set aside. Act V of 1894 proposes to amend the Code of Civil Procedure. In cl. 2 of s. 1 it declares that it shall come into force at once; and in s. 2 it declares that after s. 310 of the Civil Procedure Code the following section, namely, s. 310A shall be inserted. The question, therefore, which we have to decide is whether, on the well-known rules of construction, s. 310A, is a rule of procedure or one which destroys any vested interest in the purchaser existing before its enactment. In the course of the argument before us reference has been made to three cases decided in this Court. The first case is that of Lal Mohun Mukerji v. Jogendra Chunder Roy (2). The decision in that case was a decision with reference to the provisions of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That Act is an Act to amend and consolidate certain enactments relating to the law of landlord and tenant—an Act which, on the face of it, creates substantive rights and interests in the soil to be carried out to a large extent under the procedure of the Civil Procedure Code. In that case it was decided that s. 174 of that Act had not retrospective effect. The next case is the case of Tupsee Singh v. Ram Sarun Koeri (3). In that case it was decided that s. 21, sub-s. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act had retrospective effect, and applied to suits pending at the date of the commencement of that Act. The third case is the case of Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (4). That was a case depending upon the construction of the Rent Act, and s. 6 of the General Clauses Consolidation Act, namely, Act I of 1868. The general rule of decision applicable in all these cases was that retrospective effect is not ordinarily given to an enactment so as to affect substantive rights; but that provisions affecting mere procedure apply to pending cases. I accept that principle, but I accept it also with the reservation pointed out by Mr. Justice Wilson in Deb Narain Dutt's case at p. 270 that there is no use in citing one Act for the purpose of construing another, no [951] more than there is to refer to the construction of one document as a guide to a Judge in construing another. In both cases the rules laid down to guide us in coming to a conclusion are the same.

Each enactment, as it is in the case of each document, must be construed by itself according to the intention of the framers. If, therefore, we turn to s. 310 A to find out whether it is a section of procedure or one affecting a substantive right, we have the following circumstances to guide us. Act XIV of 1882 is an Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to Procedure of Courts of Civil Judicature. On the face of it it is an Act of Procedure and nothing more. It provides the form and manner of conducting and carrying on suits through their various stages from commencement to final judgment and execution according to principles and rules laid down in the Act itself. In form, in name, and in substance it professes to deal with matters of procedure and not matters of right. Chapter XIX of the Code deals with execution of decrees. This Chapter is divided into several parts of which A describes the way in which decrees may be executed; B deals with applications for execution; C deals with staying execution; D refers to questions for the Court executing a decree; E describes the modes of execution; F refers to attachment of property, and G is that portion of the Code which has been amended by the section in question and treats of sale and delivery of the property. This last division is still further sub-divided: (a) contains the general rules under which sales and delivery of property should be made; (b) lays down rules as to moveable property; and (c) prescribes rules as to immoveable property. It is in this subdivision (c), that is to say, in the rules prescribed as to how a Court should sell immoveable property, that s. 310 A is directed to be inserted. It seems to me what the Legislature intended was to amend the rules of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to sale and delivery of immoveable property. That seems to me both in form and substance a rule of procedure under which no party has a vested interest. For these reasons alone I am of opinion that the rule should be discharged. But in addition to this I think there are other reasons which ought to bring us to the same conclusion. Section 310 A provides that if a person [952] applies under s. 311 he shall not get the benefit of s. 310A. It appears to me that s. 311 refers to matters of procedure and procedure only. It is not therefore unreasonable to presume that when two alternative remedies are prescribed, and one of them is a matter of procedure, the other ranks no higher. Apart, however, from the interpretation that I have put upon Act V of 1894, there seem to be other objections to making this rule absolute. Under s. 316 of the Code a purchaser has no vested interest in the property before the date of his certificate. If before that date the judgment-debtor pays into Court the amount due, the execution would cease, and the purchaser could not insist upon the sale being confirmed and a certificate being given to him. Moreover, as pointed out in the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Prosunno Kumar Sannyal v. Kali Das Sanyal (1) that when a question arises under s. 244, the fact that the purchaser, who is not a party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held to be a bar to the application of s. 244. Now, the question to be decided under s. 310A is one which falls under s. 244. By s. 2 of the Code the determination of any question mentioned or referred to in s. 244, but not specified in s. 588, is within the definition of "decree;" and I observe that the matter dealt within s. 310A is not specified in s. 588. If therefore we were to make such a rule absolute it would be to allow a person who has no vested interest in the property, nor the carriage of the suit, to ask the Court to decide, as between him and the parties to the suit a point which is properly the subject of appeal between the parties. It seems to me that that is not a position in which we ought to place ourselves. For all these reasons I would discharge the rule.

NORRIS, J.—I have had the advantage of considering the judgment that has been delivered by Mr. Justice Ghose. I entirely agree in the reasoning therein adopted and in the conclusion arrived at.

PETHERAM, C.J.—On the 5th of January 1894 Jogendra Nath Banerjee obtained a money decree against Apurba Krishna Dass for Rs. 36, and on the 30th of the same month applied to [953] execute the decree. The property now in question was duly attached in the execution proceedings, and on the 8th of February a notification was issued by which it was notified that the property would be sold on the 26th of March. On the 2nd of March the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act 1894 came into operation. On the 26th of March the property was sold and purchased by Girish Chundra Basu, the present petitioner. On the 17th of April the judgment-debtor applied under s. 310A of the Civil Procedure Code to have the sale set aside, and on the 30th the Munsif made an order under that section setting it aside. This rule was afterwards obtained from this Court on the application of the purchaser to set aside the order of the Munsif and to affirm the sale. Baboo Ashutosh Mukerjee in support of the rule has relied on three Full Bench cases of this Court—Lal Mohun Mukerjee v. Jogendra Ohunder Roy (1), Uzir Ali v. Ram Komal Shaha (2), and Deb Narain Dutt v. Narendra Krishna (3). In the first two of these cases the question turned on the construction of s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and in them the learned Judges held that when a decree had been obtained before that Act had come into operation the judgment-debtor could not avail himself of that section, although the sale took place after the Act had come into operation. Mr. Justice Mitter in giving the judgment of the Court in the first case says: "Section 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act confers upon the judgment-debtors a new right which they did not possess under the old Act. Therefore the presumption is (in the absence of express legislation or direct implication to the contrary) that its operation is not intended to be retrospective." The second case merely followed the first. In the third case the question arose under s. 170 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the judgment is only useful to us in the present case, in so far as Mr. Justice Wilson in delivering the judgment states the rule which should guide Courts in such cases. At p. 272 he says: "The rule is that retrospective effect is not ordinarily given to an enactment so as to affect substantive rights, but that provisions affecting mere procedure are applied to pending proceedings."

[954] The object, to attain which s. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was enacted, resembles very closely that to attain which the Civil Procedure Code was amended by the addition of s. 310-A. The two Full Benches of this Court have held that the object was attained in the case of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the creation of a new right, and not by a mere change of procedure, and we are no doubt bound to follow those decisions. The words used in the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act, 1894, are however very different from those used in the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Act in which the amendments are made is one of an entirely different description from the Bengal Tenancy Act, it being one whose sole purpose is to provide and regulate the procedure of the Civil Courts, and as for these reasons the present case is not identical with those in the two Full Bench cases it is not concluded by them, though in deciding it we must be guided by the principles which are enunciated in those cases. I am of opinion that upon those principles, both as they are explained by Mr. Justice Mitter in the first case and by Mr. Justice Wilson in the second, this sale is subject to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code as amended by the Act of 1894; in other words, that it is subject to the provisions of s. 310-A of the Code. The new section appears in Chapter XIX of the Code which is headed "Of the execution of decrees," and is the Chapter which provides the machinery by which a successful litigant may obtain the fruits of the decree which has been made in his favour. By this machinery a person who has obtained a decree for money could, before the 2nd of March 1894, realise his claims by having the property of his debtor sold by the Court unless the money is paid before the sale, and all that the new section has done, as far as the decree-holder and his debtor are concerned, has been to extend the period, during which the debtor may discharge his liability by payment, for 30 days beyond the date of the sale. This in my opinion is a mere modification of the mode in which the successful litigant may obtain the fruits of his decree, and is strictly within Mr. Justice Wilson's definition of the principles in the passage which has already been quoted. But even if we were bound, in consequence of the decision of the Full Bench in the first case, to hold that the new section of the Code [955] created a new right in the judgment-debtor, still I think that the result will be the same, as in my opinion the words used in this Act bring it strictly within the exception mentioned by Mr. Justice Mitter, in delivering the judgment of the Full Bench in the first case. The Act of 1894 came into operation on the 2nd of March, and from that day s. 310A has been as much a part of the Civil Procedure Code as any other section of it. The section on its face applies to all sales under the Code, and this according to the ordinary meaning of words must mean the Code as it exists at the time when the sale takes place; and by using the words which have been used the Legislature have, in my opinion, expressly enacted that this section shall have retrospective effect in the sense that it shall take effect on sales made after the Act had come into operation, though the execution proceedings of which the sale was a part had been commenced before it had come into operation. I would only further remark that no injustice can result from this reading of the section, as it does not affect any interest which was in existence before the 2nd of March, the purchaser not having acquired any until the 26th, at which time the new law was in force. For these reasons I am of opinion that this rule should be discharged.

The result is that in accordance with the opinion of the majority of this Bench the rule will be made absolute with costs.

Charge to Jury—Misdirection—Appeal Court, Powers of, in cases of trial by jury when there has been misdirection—Rioting—Common object—Alternative charges—Criminal Procedure Code (X of 1882), ss. 236, 303, 418, 423 and 537.

An accused in a trial by Jury is entitled to the verdict of the Jury on questions of fact, and where a verdict is vitiated owing to misdirection by the [956] Judge, the Appeal Court has no option but to set aside the verdict and direct a re-trial. Were the Appeal Court to go into the facts in such a case, it would be substituting the decision of the Judges of that Court for the verdict of the Jury, who have the opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appeal Court can only arrive at a decision on the perusal of the evidence.

Makin v. Attorney General of New South Wales (1) referred to.

Section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant an Appeal Court, in a case where there has been misdirection in a charge to a Jury, going into the evidence with a view to decide whether there is sufficient evidence to justify a conviction. Under s. 418 an appeal in a case tried by a Jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appeal Court has no power to try the accused on matters of fact. The word "erroneous" in cl. (d) of s. 423 must not be read as "wrong on the facts," but must be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law.

Fourteen accused were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons and with murder and causing grievous hurt during such riot. The common object alleged by the prosecution was to compel the payment of certain money by one of the persons of the opposite party. Some of the accused who admitted their presence at the scene of the occurrence stated that they had been attacked on account of an allegation being made that one of the opposite party had enticed away another's wife, and that they had merely acted in self-defence. The case was tried before a Jury, and on the close of the case for the prosecution the Sessions Judge, considering that possibly the common object alleged by the prosecution might be considered not to have been proved, amended the charge and added an alternative common object to it, viz., that the object of the assembly was to punish one of the opposite party for enticing away another's wife. There was no evidence on the record to prove the alternative common object, it being based solely on a portion of the statements of some of the accused, and the Sessions Judge put it to the Jury that it was an inference that could possibly be drawn from the evidence, but it was for them to draw that inference or not. The Jury convicted all the accused without specifying which common object they relied on, and were not asked, under s. 303 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, any questions for the purpose of ascertaining what their verdict was based on.

Held, that the Judge had misdirected the Jury, and that the verdict of the Jury leaving it uncertain what was the common object which actuated the accused, it was bad in law, and that the conviction must be set aside and the case retried.

Held, further, that it was unfair to use a part of the statements of some of [957] the accused put forward in their defence as justifying the use of force by them in repelling the attack of the opposite party, for the purpose of showing a common object as against them, and that the statements should have been taken in their entirety and could not in any event be used as against the rest of the accused.

Held, further, that if the Sessions Judge was of opinion that there were grounds for charging the accused with a common object other than that alleged by the prosecution, his proper course was not to amend the charge but to add a separate count or counts to the charge upon which a separate verdict could be taken. Section 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only authorises a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, and not where there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence.

THIS was an appeal preferred by fourteen Kabulis who had been tried by the Sessions Judge of Hoogly and a Jury and convicted of offences under ss. 148 and 325 read with s. 149 of the Penal Code and sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

The prisoners were tried on four separate charges, namely, (1) murder under s. 302 read with s. 149; (2) culpable homicide not amounting to murder under s. 304 read with s. 149; (3) rioting armed with deadly weapons under s. 148 read with s. 149; and (4) causing grievous hurt under s. 325 read with s. 149. The Jury found them all not guilty on the first two charges, but convicted them on the third and fourth charges. The appeal was preferred mainly on the ground that the Sessions Judge had misdirected the Jury in his charge.

The common object as originally set out in the third charge was "by means of criminal force to compel Mir Azad to pay money which he was not legally bound to do and to use criminal force on Mir Azad and his party," but during the trial the Sessions Judge, after the case for the prosecution was closed, amended that charge under the provisions of s. 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and added an alternative common object in the following words, "or else to punish Khan Ghalib for having enticed the wife of one Sher Ali."

The charges against the accused are four in number. The first to which I shall call your attention is that numbered three, viz., that they were guilty [958] of rioting armed with deadly weapons, and, that as members of the unlawful assembly engaged in that rioting, they had a common object which has been specified in the alternative, and as to which I will address you later on. Further, the accused are all charged with murder, culpable homicide, and grievous hurt as offences committed by some member or members of the unlawful assembly. If any of these offences was committed in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of the assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, then each member of the unlawful assembly is considered guilty of these offences, whether he actually committed it or not. The case for the prosecution is briefly as follows:—

There is a small colony of Kabulis, about eleven in number, living together at Bhadresar, in a lodging which some call Mir Abdullah's lodging and others call Mir Azab's lodging. It is alleged that a band of other Kabulis living at Manla, Simla, Rishra, Champdani and other places were collected together by Wafadar, the accused No. 1, and that this band estimated in number from 25 to 40, armed with lathies under the leadership of Wafadar, went to the house where the colony at Bhadresar were living, and that some 15 or 16 entered the house; that Wafadar demanded from Mir Azad, one of that colony, money which he said Mir Azad ought to pay him. Mir Azad denied any liability to pay money to Wafadar, and that therefore Wafadar gave the order to beat the fellow. Mir Azad, however, retreated and made his way to the thannah. Khan Ghalib, who was at the time in Mir Abdullah's lodging, raised his arm to stop any violence, whereupon, under Wafadar's order, Wafadar's followers attacked Khan Ghalib so savagely, and beat him so unmercifully, that Khan Ghalib died in a few minutes. The other Kabulis living in Mir Abdullah's lodging interposed, but were themselves severely handled, one of them, Khan Ghalib's son, receiving injuries on the head and having his arm broken. It is alleged that all the accused were members of Wafadar's band.

That is shortly the story of the prosecution. The defence on the other hand is two-fold. Six of the accused have a story to tell of the occurrences of that afternoon. They say that they had been invited to dinner and on their way to their host's house they passed through Bhadresar. There they met Mir Abdullah and other members of the colony who requested them to come into their lodging, and rest a while, and have a smoke and drink. With this request they complied. Khan Sadik offered the wayfarers sherbet. The latter replied that they would not take drink at his hands, because Khan Sadik had offended their moral sense by living with another man's wife. This speech made the inhabitants of the colony very angry, and they attacked their guests with daos, wounded them and drove them forth from the house, though they admit having defended themselves with lathies. This is the substance of the story told by Wafadar, and the other five who were, he says, accompanying him to dinner adopt that story as their own. The remaining eight accused deny all knowledge of any occurrence of the sort told by the prosecution, deny that [959] they were present in Wafadar's band, and give various reasons why they have been falsely accused in this case.

You have thus two stories laid before you as to the occurrences of the afternoon of 20th April. On the one side you have an account of a premeditated attack carried out with violence. On the other side you have an account of an affray attributed almost to an accident, arising out of an angry word spoken almost on the spur of the moment. One portion of your task will probably be to determine which of these two stories is true, or whether either of them is true.

In dealing with matters which are uncertain and in dispute, it is important to apprehend clearly in your minds those facts which are not in dispute and any other facts, which, though disputed, you may yet hold to be so certainly proved that you can make them a basis for drawing inferences as to facts which are uncertain. In other words, you must reason from the known to the unknown. I proceed, therefore, in the first place to put before you certain facts which are either admitted by the parties, or else are proved by evidence, of the truth of which it is possible you may have no reason to entertain any doubt.

(1) In the first place you have it admitted that there was a fight in Mir Abdullah's house in the afternoon between two contending sets of Kabulis, one set of whom lived in the house and the other set of whom came from some distance. Members of each set were wounded, some of them very severely, and you have it from the medical evidence that the external wounds of the inmates of the house which are bruises were caused by blunt instruments such as lathies. The wounds on the other side—the strangers, as I may call them—were incised wounds, caused by some sharp cutting instrument, such as daos. There can be no doubt then that the strangers, as has been stated in the evidence, were armed with lathies, and that the inmates of the house snatched up anything that first came to hand, and that the daos which were found lying about by the Sub-Inspector and have been produced in Court were the instruments used by the inmates of the house, and not by the other party. Daos, such as these shown to you, are common articles of domestic use, for the purpose of cutting up vegetables, fish and such like things; and it is not unlikely that they would be lying about and picked up as the most convenient instrument available at the moment of a sudden attack, whether for offence or defence.

(2). In the second place you will probably not find it difficult to arrive at some definite finding whether Khan Ghalib was present at the disturbance, and received in that disturbance the injuries, which the medical evidence shows resulted in his death. The accused, who speak to the affray, deny that Khan Ghalib was in the house at all, or at any rate they say he was not there. These accused went off after the occurrence to the Serampore thannah, and there complained of an attack on themselves, and in their complaint stated that Khan Ghalib was one of those who invited them into the house. Those [960] inmates of Mir Abdullah's lodging who have given evidence in this case almost all speak of Ghalib's presence, and most of them describe how he was beaten; but the most convincing testimony is that of the Sub-Inspector who must have arrived on the spot within half an hour almost after the disturbance was over, and this is what he says (Sub-Inspector's evidence read.) On this evidence, coupled with the medical evidence, can you entertain any reasonable doubt that Khan Ghalib was at the time of the disturbance in Mir Abdullah's lodging, and that in the course of that disturbance he received the injuries which resulted in his death?

(3). The third point on which I think it is perhaps possible to come to some certain finding free from reasonable doubt is the question whether information had been given by Mir Abdullah to the police in the morning of the Friday, on the afternoon of which the disturbance occurred, information namely that Wafadar and Shamudar contemplated an attack on Mir Abdullah and his party on account of ill feeling arising out of money dealings. Under date of April 20th you find two consecutive entries, one purporting to have been made at 8 o'clock in the morning and the other at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of that Friday. The first relates to information given by Mir Abdullah that an attack was apprehended, and the second information given by Azad that an attacking party had arrived. The Sub-Inspector deposes that these entries were made at the time recorded, and that he made them with his own hand. You are asked by the pleader for the defence to disbelieve the Sub-Inspector, because there are blank spaces in the station diary, and that it is possible therefore that the entries may have been made on a subsequent day. It is for you to judge what force there is in that argument. The diary for each day at a police station must always begin, as you have been told, with the printed form on the right hand page, showing the number of men and officers present. The occurrences of the day are then entered under this form, and if there are not sufficient entries to fill the blank papers, there must of necessity be a space intervening between the last entry on any day and the printed form for the following day. But there is one fact which has been brought to your attention by the pleader for the defence himself which seems effectually to dispose of the opinion expressed by him that it was possible the entries which you are now considering were made on a subsequent day. The diary is closed at Bhadresar for each day at four o'clock, as the post then goes out, and a copy is sent to head-quarters. At the close of each day you will find what I may call a meteorological report of the past twenty-four hours stating whether there has been wind, rain or storm, under the heading "miscellaneous news." Immediately following the entry as to Azad's information there is such a meteorological report, and then a notice that the dak has been made up. We know from the Sub-Inspector that after receiving Mir Azad's information he went to the scene of occurrence and remained there several hours. If the dak was made up as usual at 4 o'clock and the meteorological entry then, it was impossible for the entries to have been [961] subsequently added. Another point to which the pleader for the defence has called your attention is to the fact that the word "lena" seems to have been subsequently added as a correction, after the rest of the entry had been made, but I fail to see how such a fact affords the slightest indication whether the entry itself was made at the time it is said to have been made, or whether it was made subsequently. The addition is of little or no importance and is consistent with either supposition. To sum up so far: There are three main facts which, if you believe the Sub-Inspector, you may perhaps be able to consider as placed beyond all reasonable doubt, on the admitted facts of the case and on the Sub-Inspector's evidence:—

I. There was a disturbance in Mir Abdullah's house between two sets of Kabulis, in the course of which severe injuries were received on either side.

II. That Khan Ghalib was present, and in the course of that disturbance received the injuries which resulted in his death.

III. That information was given by Abdullah that an attack was premeditated.

I now proceed to lay before you and examine the two accounts of the affray. I will first take the story told by Wafadar and five others of the accused. They say they were invited to take sherbet, but as they refused to take it from Khan Sadik's hands, and gave as their reason that his father was living in adultery, they were set upon by Khan Sadik's friends. This story, though it admits the disturbance, omits all mention of Khan Ghalib's presence and does not account for the information given that Friday morning to the Police. It is also at variance with the information given by Sap Khan, one of the six accused, who went to Serampore and spoke on behalf of the party. In the complaint lodged by him to the Head Constable, that is, in the complaint which has been produced before you and proved by the Head Constable, there is not a word about Khan Sadik offering sherbet and their refusal to take it. I do not even find Khan Sadik mentioned. The omission on the part of Sap Khan is unaccountable, if Khan Sadik's conduct was the fons et origo mali, the origin of the whole disturbance. It is argued that the omission was not on the part of Sap Khan, but on the part of the Head Constable who recorded the statement. Does it seem likely to you, hard as these Kabulis' language is to understand, that the Head Constable should have failed to understand, or if he did understand, to record one of the most material parts of the information? There is also another and direct reason for not accepting such an argument. The six accused were accompanied to the Serampore police station by two pleaders and a mukhtear, who may be presumed to have looked after their clients, and to have seen that the complaints were properly put before the Head Constable. Had the incident about sherbet been related at the thannah, it would have been easy for the accused to have adduced unimpeachable evidence of the fact.

It is for the Jury to decide whether the story now set up by Wafadar, Sap Khan and four others is true or not. If it is true that the quarrel was [962] unpremeditated, and that these six were attacked with doas, you would probably come to the conclusion that they were acting in self defence when they inflicted injuries on Khan Ghalib and the other members of Abdullah's party. There would be no ground for the charge of rioting against any of the accused, and you would acquit them all on all the charges.

Should you, however, come to the conclusion that Wafadar's story is not true, you must be careful not on that account to presume that the account given by the witness for the prosecution is true. The burden of proof lies on the prosecution, and it is your duty to examine, with even greater care and attention, the case for the prosecution, and decide whether it or any portion of it is true. That case I now lay before you in greater detail than I have as yet done.

It is said some six months ago one Mahomed Amir came to this part of the country from Peshawar district, and after a short stay went home again. That during his stay here he advanced sums of money to three Bengalis, amounting to Rs. 35 in all, and that when he was departing he entrusted Mir Azad with the task of collecting this money and remitting it to him. Then it is said that a few days before the occurrence Wafadar sent word to Azad that Azad was to pay the sums collected for Mahomed Amir to Wafadar, whose ryot Mahomed Amir was. Azad replied that he owed no money to Wafadar, and when he collected what was due to Amir, he should remit the sum to Amir direct. On the Thursday, the day before the disturbance, Daulat says he saw Amir in the company of a number of Kabulis who are identified as having come on the following day; and that he overheard Wafadar assert his intention of getting the money out of Azad by force. Daulat secretly came and told Azad what he had heard, and this led to the information being given at the thannah on the following Friday morning, of which you have already heard. Then you have had the evidence of a number of Kabulis living with Abdullah, and Abdullah himself, relating how Wafadar arrived at the house with an armed band of forty men. Sixteen of them came into the house, and Wafadar repeated in person the request he had previously made to a messenger, and received much the same answer. Wafadar attacked and ordered others to attack Azad. Azad escaped scot-free and ran off to the thannah. When Khan Ghalib interposed, the attention of Wafadar and his companions were directed to that unfortunate man, and he was attacked as well as others who came to defend him, including his son Sadik (or Sadyak). Every single one of the accused is pointed out as having been present in Wafadar's band, and some of them are stated to have entered the house, and others to have gone round by a lane to the courtyard at the back of the house.

Now this story is consistent with the three main facts which I have enumerated above, as those which, on the admission and the evidence, you may find to have been proved for certain. It accounts for the fight, it accounts for the wounds and death of Ghalib, and it accounts for the information given [963] early on the morning of Friday, 20th April. At the same time there are two or three points in the story to which it is right that I should draw your attention.

In the first place does not Wafadar's conduct strike you as somewhat strange? Assuming (for the moment only) that Mahomed Amir had made loans to some Bengalis, and had intrusted Azad with their collection, and assuming also that Wafadar, whether under authority from Mahomed Amir or not, wished that the collections made by Azad should be handed over to him, it does not seem at all likely that Wafadar should have resorted almost at once to force in order to give effect to that wish. Would you not have expected that Wafadar should come once at least to Mir Azad in a friendly way and personally tell Mir Azad of Mahomed Amir's wishes? Is it likely that after sending a verbal message, he should have come with a band of thirty or forty to realize a sum of Rs. 35, even before he knew whether Mir Azad would comply with a personal request? In the second place see how Mir Azad escaped without injury, while Khan Ghalib, who apparently had no concern with the dispute between Wafadar and Mir Azad, was so severely beaten that he shortly succumbed to the injuries then received. And all for what? For merely raising his hand to forbid violence towards Mir Azad. It seems to me hardly possible that we have had from the witnesses for the prosecution the whole truth, and it seems very probable that they have either kept back something, or invented something to explain the common object of their assailants. On the other hand there is a certain amount of corroboration for the story that the dispute arose out of money dealings.

On the morning of that Friday Mir Abdullah had reported a likelihood of a breach of the peace on account of money dealings, or (if you think that the word lena was subsequently added) on account of money due (the latter interpretation accords better with the story now told). On the same afternoon, Mir Azad, who had escaped, reported the arrival of the opposite party, and used, if we trust the diary, almost the same expression. The expression is no doubt vague, but then when the Sub-Inspector went off to the scene of the occurrence, he took down a statement of Mir Abdullah, which, except in one particular to be noticed presently, gives the same account of the origin of the disturbance as you have heard in Court. (First information of Mir Abdulla read and points of similarity to present story noticed). If the whole of the story about Mahomed Amir were false, where had Mir Abdullah, who had also been wounded, the time or opportunity to concoct the story? It is easier, however, to give an account which is true in the main, but distorted as to some of the facts, than to invent an altogether false story, and it will be for you to consider whether the former view is correct in the present case.

Whatever corroboration of the present story is afforded by the earlier informations, and the information given directly after the disturbance was over, it is scarcely possible to get over the impression that something has been [964] concealed, or not truly told, an impression arising from the improbable nature of the conduct attributed to Wafadar. There are certain facts which seemed to me to point to a different motive on the part of Wafadar and his party.

You have in the first place the fact that Khan Ghalib was living with the wife of Sher Ali, a fellow-countryman of the parties. Whether Sher Ali had divorced the woman and Khan Ghalib had married her we have no evidence to determine one way or the other, but you have this fact from the mouth of the accused themselves that Khan Ghalib's behaviour in living with Sher Ali's wife was considered by Wafadar, and the five others who admittedly accompanied him, to be adulterous, and that it aroused so much irritation and animosity in their breasts that they would consider it an insult to be offered water by Khan Ghalib's son.

In the second place you have the fact that it was Khan Ghalib who was done to death, and that, of the other persons living in Mir Abdullah's house, it was Khan Ghalib's son who was most severely injured.

It was a consideration of these circumstances that led me to alter the third count of the charge by adding in the alternative a sentence to the charge sheet, with reference to the common object of the assembly. The common object of the unlawful assembly defined in the charge sheet as now framed is either (1) by means of criminal force to compel Mir Azad to pay money which he was not legally bound to do; and (2) to use criminal force on Mir Azad and his party, or else to punish Khan Ghalib for having enticed the wife of Sher Ali. The first object is that which is definitely alleged by the prosecution; the second or the alternative object is not alleged by the prosecution. If, however, you are convinced that the story of Wafadar and his party coming to the house and of their beating Khan Ghalib in such a way as to cause death is true, it will not be an unfair or unjust inference to make from the statements of some of the accused themselves, corroborated as it is by the evidence of some of the witnesses for the prosecution that Khan Ghalib is living with a woman who was Sher Ali's wife, and whom he is not proved to have married, that the common object of the band was to punish Khan Ghalib for enticing Sher Ali's wife. Whether you should draw that inference or not is a matter entirely for you to decide. I only point out that it is an inference that is possible on the evidence. I have stated that the first information given by Mir Abdullah directly after the disturbance differs in one particular from the story now told. The name of the person to whom Mahomed Amir is said to have lent the money is stated in the first information to be Afzal Khan. The public prosecutor thinks that is only a mistake for Mir Azad—a mistake caused by the difficulty of catching the exact pronunciation of names as made by these up-countrymen, of which you had many illustrations in Court. That is an explanation which might be accepted in default of any other, were it not for the fact that among the persons living in Abdullah's lodging there is one whose name is given by Mir Abdullah in Court as Mir Afzal Khan. Afzal Khan is much more likely to be a mistake, [965] for Mir Afzal Khan than for Mir Azad. If this view is correct, there is still greater room for doubt whether the story about Mahomed Amir entrusting Azad with the collection of his dues is correct. I have however before pointed out that money matters were even before the riot referred to as the cause of animosity on Wafadar's part. I have also pointed out that Mir Abdullah had hardly time for concocting an altogether false story, and that he was more likely to have distorted a true story. These considerations raised in my mind a suspicion whether the person to whom Mahomed Amir entrusted his collections was not Khan Ghalib himself. If that were so, the variation as to Afzal and Azad would be accounted for, viz., by the desire to avoid all mention of Khan Ghalib, whose adulterous intercourse, if there was such, it would be natural for his friends to endeavour to screen. It would perhaps account for the conduct on the part of Wafadar and his companions. They did not want him to collect Mahomed Amir's dues, and this object would be both to prevent him from doing so, and to punish him for his behaviour. As I have said, however, this is only a suspicion, unsupported by direct evidence, and arising from some of the aspects of the case and of the evidence put forward by the prosecution. It is not inconsistent with the alternative common object alleged in the charge.

It is for you now to come to some finding as to what happened on the afternoon of 20th April and to determine what offences were committed by the accused.

(1) Are you satisfied that a band of men armed with lathies (sticks) came to Mir Abdullah's lodging on the afternoon of 20th April? Are you satisfied that the common object of the band was either of those stated in third count? Are you satisfied that violence was used in prosecution of the common object? Are you satisfied that all or any of the accused were members of that band and were armed with lathies? If so, then those of them who were there would be guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons.

(2) Are you satisfied that Khan Ghalib's death was caused by injuries received from any member of that band? If so, then you will have to consider what offence was committed when those injuries were caused. * *

(3) Lastly, if you have come to a finding that there was an unlawful assembly, which committed rioting, if you have come to the conclusion that murder, culpable homicide, or grievous hurt was caused by the injuries inflicted on Khan Ghalib and the others, you will have to consider whether such offence or offences (murder, culpable homicide, or grievous hurt) were committed in the prosecution of the common object, or such as the members knew were likely to be committed in the prosecution of the common object, were they a natural consequence of the common object? If you find that the offence of murder, culpable homicide, or grievous hurt was committed in prosecution, &c., or such as the members knew to be likely to be committed, then each member of the unlawful assembly is deemed guilty of the offence. If you find that the offence of murder was not a [966] natural consequence of the common object, then you will have to determine specifically whether any of the accused committed that offence. As to Khan Ghalib, the only person said to have struck him was Wafadar (s. 34 of the Penal Code referred to). If Wafadar did not by himself commit the offence, if he did not himself deal the blow or blows which caused Ghalib's death, yet if you find that he struck a blow in concert with the others who actually caused the death, and with a common object, he is guilty of the same offence as those who caused the death. I notice you yourselves recorded notes as to the person by whom the different blows on the other persons were struck, but if you wish it I will read out the evidence from my notes. Remember that if there was an unlawful assembly, a rioting, and if the offence you may find to have been caused when the injuries on Khan Ghalib and the others were inflicted was in prosecution of a known likely consequence of the common object, you need not find specifically who caused those injuries, it will only then be necessary to determine whether the accused or any of them were members of the unlawful assembly. But if there was no unlawful assembly, or if the offences committed were not in pursuance of, or a likely consequence of the common object, then it will be necessary to determine specifically whether all or any of the accused committed the offence himself."

The Jury having found all the accused not guilty on the first two charges, but guilty on the third and fourth charge, the Sessions Judge sentenced Wafadar Khan, as the leader of the assembly, to five years'

CRIMINAL. All the accused appealed to the High Court. The grounds of appeal, amongst others, were : that the amendment in the third charge by the Sessions Judge, after the close of the case for the prosecution, by adding the alternative common object referred to above, was made without there being any evidence on the record to support the allegation, and that he ought to have directed the Jury that there was no evidence that Khan Ghalib had enticed the wife of Sher Ali, or that the common object of the assembly was to punish Khan Ghalib for having done so, whereas he did not so direct them ; that he misdirected the Jury by telling them that the inference that this was the common object of the assembly was one which could be possibly drawn from the evidence, notwithstanding the fact that there was no evidence on the point, and that it was not the common object alleged by the prosecution ; that as it appeared that the Sessions Judge did not accept, and was not satisfied that [967] the common object alleged by the prosecution had been proved, if the Jury, as they might have done, having regard to the directions given them, held the same view, the accused had been convicted of being members of an unlawful assembly with a common object of which there was no evidence, and that if the Jury disbelieved the evidence of the common object alleged by the prosecution, they could not legally find the accused guilty in the absence of any evidence of a different common object, and could only legally find the person or persons guilty of causing the injuries to Khan Ghalib and Khan Sadik whom they might find to have respectively caused the injuries, and that none of the other accused could be held liable for their acts ; that, save as to two of the accused, there was no evidence that any of the accused had caused any of the injuries ; that the Sessions Judge had misdirected the Jury by treating the report made by some of the accused at the Serampore thannah as evidence against all the accused ; and that the accused had all been materially prejudiced by such misdirections.

Mr. M. Ghose, Mr. Henderson, and Babu Surendra Nath Roy, for the appellants.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Leith), for the Crown.

The arguments of counsel appear sufficiently from the judgment of the High Court (BEVERLEY and BANERJEE, JJ.), which was delivered by :—

JUDGMENT.

BEVERLEY, J.—This appeal has been preferred on behalf of fourteen Kabulis, who have been convicted by a Jury in the Court of Sessions at Hooghly, of offences under ss. 148 and 325, read with s. 149 of the Penal Code, and the appeal is preferred on the ground that the verdict is vitiated by reason of misdirection by the Sessions Judge in his charge to the Jury.

The fourteen appellants were committed to the Sessions Court upon the following charges : “ First, that you, on or about the 20th day of April 1894, at Bhadresar P. S., Serampore, committed murder by causing the death of Khan Ghalib, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. $\frac{302}{149}$ of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions. Secondly, that you, on or about the same day and at the same place by causing death of Khan Ghalib, committed culpable homicide, [968] and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. $\frac{304}{149}$ of the India Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions.

Thirdly, that you, on or about the same day and at the same place, were members of an unlawful assembly, being armed with deadly weapons, the common object of which was, by means of criminal force, to compel Mir Azad to pay money, which he was not legally bound to do, and to use criminal force on Mir Azad and his party, and did in prosecution of the common object use criminal force, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 148/149 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions. Fourthly, that you, on or about the same day and at the same place, voluntarily caused grievous hurt to Khan Ghalib and Khan Sadik, and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 325/149 of the Indian Penal Code, and within the cognizance of the Court of Sessions."

In the course of the trial in the Sessions Court, at the close of the case for the prosecution, the Sessions Judge, under the provisions of s. 227 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, amended the third head of the charge by adding a sentence in the alternative, as to the common object of the illegal assembly. The charge as amended runs as follows:—

Thirdly, that you, on or about the same day and at the same place, were members of an unlawful assembly, being armed with deadly weapons, the common object of which was either (1) by means of criminal force to compel Mir Azad to pay money, which he was not legally bound to do, and (2) to use criminal force on Mir Azad and his party, or else to punish Khan Ghalib for having enticed the wife of one Sher Ali, and did in prosecution of the common object use criminal force and thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 148/149 of the Indian Penal Code and within the cognizance of the Court of Session.

It may be pointed out that none of the charges is very accurately framed. As regards the first, second and fourth heads there is nothing beyond the mere mention of s. 149 of the Penal Code to show that the accused were charged with the offences therein named by virtue of the provisions of that section. In order that those charges may be intelligible, they must [969] be read together with the third head of the charge, in which alone the accused are directly charged with being members of an unlawful assembly acting in prosecution of a common object.

As regards the third head of the charge the mention of s. 149 is meaningless, unless it is thought that where some members only of an unlawful assembly are guilty of rioting armed with deadly weapons, all the members of such assembly may be convicted under s. 148 by virtue of the provisions of s. 149.

The Jury acquitted the accused on the first and second heads of the charge, and convicted them on the third and fourth heads. The verdict, as recorded by the Sessions Judge, runs as follows:—

"Verdict of the Jury."

"On the first charge, that of murder, we find all the accused not guilty."

"On the second charge, that of culpable homicide, we find the accused not guilty."

"On the third charge, that of rioting armed with deadly weapons, we find all the accused guilty."

"On the fourth charge, that of voluntarily causing grievous hurt, we find all the accused guilty."

Mr. Ghose contends that this verdict is vitiated on three grounds which may be shortly stated as follows:—

(1) That the Sessions Judge misdirected the Jury by adding to the third head of the charge an alternative allegation as to the common object of the unlawful assembly, and leaving it open to the Jury to convict on that altered charge, although there was no evidence on the record in support of such allegation.

(2) That the Sessions Judge misdirected the Jury in allowing them to treat as evidence in the case (i) the deposition of Bepin Behary Soor before the committing Magistrate, and (ii) the complaint of one of the accused at the Serampore thannah.

(3) That the Sessions Judge was wrong in treating as one of the admitted facts in the case the alleged giving of information of the intended attack at the Bhadresar outpost on the morning of the day of the occurrence.

We will deal with the two latter points first.

[970] As regards the deposition of Bepin Behary Soor, it appears that the witness was ill with small pox at the time of the trial, and the Sessions Judge, therefore, allowed his deposition before the committing Magistrate to be put in evidence under the provisions of s. 33 of the Evidence Act. The witness was not cross-examined before the Magistrate. It is contended on the authority of the case of Pyari Lall (1), that the deposition was not admissible, and we are of opinion that the contention is well founded. But at the same time, having regard to the provisions of s. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, we are not prepared to say that its improper admission is sufficient ground for a new trial. The witness merely deposes to the fact of an affray between certain Kabulis, none of whom he could identify. There is plenty of other evidence to the same effect, and it cannot be supposed that this deposition had any effect on the verdict of the Jury as bearing on the guilt or innocence of any of the accused. See the concluding remarks of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Makin v. Attorney General of New South Wales (2).

As regards the complaint made by one of the accused at the Serampore Police Station, it has been referred to by the Judge in his charge as tending to discredit the story told by six of the accused. That story was that the affray arose out of the refusal of Wafadar Khan and his party to partake of sherbut at the hands of Khan Sadik. The complaint at the Serampore Police Station was made by one of the six accused who set up this story, and it was wholly silent as to that incident or as to the presence of Khan Sadik at the time of the affray. We think that the omission to mention these circumstances was a relevant fact under s. 11 of the Evidence Act as affecting the truth or otherwise of the story told by the six accused. And as regards the other accused the complaint does not seem to have been used as evidence against them, and it is not clear to us that they have been prejudiced by its admission in evidence in any way. They are not mentioned in the complaint, and the Sessions Judge seems to have told the Jury that their defence was not the same as that of Wafadar and the five other accused who adopted his story.

[971] It is not quite correct to say that the Judge treated the information given at the Bhadresar outpost on the morning of the 20th April as an admitted fact in the case. On the contrary, the Judge speaks of it as a fact depending on the evidence of the Sub-Inspector Akhoy Kumar

(1) 4 O. L. R. 504.

(2) L. R. [1894] A. C. 57.

Chatterjee, and although he does intimate his own opinion that it is a fact placed beyond all reasonable doubt, he nevertheless discusses the evidence of the Sub-Inspector and his diary at length, and expressly leaves it to the Jury to say whether or not they believe his evidence.

We think, therefore, that the second and third grounds taken by Mr. Ghose afford no sufficient reason why we should disturb the verdict in this case.

It remains to consider whether the amendment of the third head of the charge, coupled with the remarks of the Sessions Judge thereon, amounted in law to a misdirection, and, if so, whether this Court ought to reverse the verdict and to order a new trial.

The fourteen appellants are all charged with having acted with the same common object; and it is obvious that they could not be convicted of any offence by virtue of the provisions of s. 149 of the Penal Code, unless that offence was committed in prosecution of the common object of all the accused. Queen v. Surroop Chunder Paul (1). Now the common object alleged by the prosecution was (1) by means of criminal force to compel Mir Azad to pay money which he was not legally bound to pay, and (2) to use criminal force on Mir Azad and his party.

The Sessions Judge appears to have thought that the forcible levy of the small amount of money that was in dispute was an inadequate motive for the murderous attack of Wafadar and his party. He thought that something had been concealed or not truly told, and that there were facts which seemed to point to a different motive. He accordingly amended the third head of the charge by inserting the allegation of another and a different common object, and he inserted it as an alternative. That common object so inserted was stated to be "to punish Khan Ghalib for having enticed the wife of one Sher Ali."

"The first object is that which is definitely alleged by the prosecution. The second or alternative object is not alleged by the prosecution. If, however, you are convinced that the story of Wafadar and his party coming to the house and of their beating Khan Ghalib in such a way as to cause death is true, it will not be an unfair or unjust inference to make from the statements of some of the accused themselves, corroborated as it is by the evidence of some of the witnesses for the prosecution that Khan Ghalib is living with a woman who was Sher Ali's wife, and whom he is not proved to have married, that the common object of the band was to punish Khan Ghalib for enticing Sher Ali's wife. Whether you should draw that inference or not is a matter entirely for you to decide. I only point out that it is an inference that is possible on the evidence.

"I have stated that the first information given by Mir Abdullah, directly after the disturbance, differs in one particular from the story now told. The name of the person, to whom Mahomed Amir is said to have lent the money, is stated in the first information to be Afzal Khan. The public prosecutor thinks that is only a mistake for Mir Azad—a mistake caused by the difficulty of catching the exact pronunciation of names as made by these up-country men, of which you had many illustrations in Court. That is an explanation which might be accepted in default of any other, were it not for the fact that, among the persons living in Abdullah's lodging, there is one whose name is given by Mir Abdullah in Court as Mir Afzal Khan. 'Afzal Khan' is much more likely to be a mistake for Mir Afzal Khan than for 'Mir Azad.' If this view is correct, there is still greater room for doubt whether the story about Mahomed Amir entrusting Azad with the collection of his dues is correct. I have, however, before pointed out that money matters were even before the riot referred to as the cause of animosity on Wafadar's part. I have also pointed out that Mir Abdullah had hardly time for concocting an altogether false story, and that he was more likely to have distorted a true story. These considerations raised in my mind a suspicion whether the person to whom Mahomed Amir [973] entrusted his collections was not Khan Ghalib himself. If that were so, the variation as to Afzal and Azad would be accounted for, viz., by the desire to avoid all mention of Khan Ghalib, whose adulterous intercourse, if there was such, it would be natural for his friends to endeavour to screen. It would perhaps account for the conduct on the part of Wafadar and his companions. They did not want him to collect Mahomed Amir's dues, and their object would be both to prevent him from doing so and to punish him for his behaviour. As I have said, however, this is only a suspicion, unsupported by direct evidence, and arising from some of the aspects of the case and of the evidence put forward by the prosecution. It is not inconsistent with the alternative common object alleged in the charge."

Now upon this matter Mr. Ghose contends (1) that from the verdict on this head of the charge, it is impossible to say whether the jury intended to find that the accused acted with the common object alleged by the prosecution, or with that inserted in the charge by the Judge, or with both, or some with one and some with the other; and (2) that if, and so far as, the Jury intended to find that the common object of the assembly was that inserted in the charge by the Judge, the verdict is bad, inasmuch as there is no sufficient evidence of any such common object. He contends, therefore, that the verdict must be set aside.

There can be no doubt that the Judge's proceeding in this matter was, to say the least, most unfortunate. If he was of opinion that there was ground for charging the accused with a common object, different from that alleged by the prosecution, he should have added a separate count or counts to the charge upon which a separate verdict could have been taken. Section 236 of the Code only authorises a charge in the alternative, when it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute,—not as in this case, when there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence. The result of the Judge's action has been, as pointed out, to introduce uncertainty into the verdict upon a most material point, and thereby, as we think, to vitiate it. It is to be regretted that the Judge did not even take the precaution to put such questions to the Jury, under the provisions of s. [974] 303 of the Code, as were necessary to make it clear what their verdict was.

But Mr. Ghose further contends that the Judge was not justified in asking the Jury to use the statements of some of the accused as evidence against the others, and in charging all the accused with the common object of punishing Khan Ghalib for his adulterous intercourse upon the statements of some of the accused only and in the absence of specific evidence on the point. The Judge himself says: "You have in the first place the fact that Khan Ghalib was living with the wife of Sher Ali, a fellow countryman of the parties. Whether Sher Ali had divorced the woman and Khan Ghalib had married her, we have no evidence to determine one way or the other ; but you have this fact from the mouth of the accused themselves that Khan Ghalib's behaviour in living with Sher Ali's wife was considered by Wafadar, and the five others who admittedly accompanied him, to be adulterous, and that it aroused so much irritation and animosity in their breasts that they would consider it an insult to be offered water by Khan Ghalib's son."

It is necessary to see what the statements of the accused and the evidence in regard to this matter really amount to. In his statement before the Sessions Court, Wafadar Khan stated as follows : "Khan Sadik said to us, Drink sherbet. We all of us said, We won't drink at your hands. Khan Sadik said, Why not ? I said, Your father has brought another man's wife without marrying her, that's the reason," and further on : "Khan Ghalib has run away with Sher Ali's wife."

Wafadar's statement was adopted as their own defence by five other of the accused, namely, by Maza Khan (3), Sap Khan (4), Latif Khan (5), Abdur Rahman (6) and Surrendaz (7), and another of the accused Sikandar Khan (8) made the following statement : "Khan Ghalib has enticed away Sher Ali's wife to this country, while his own wife, Khan Sadik's mother, is living in her own country. Wafadar is no retainer of Sher Ali. Khan Ghalib brought the woman three or four months ago. I don't know whether there was any disturbance on account of the woman." Accused No. 13 Nakibullah said : "I don't know Khan Ghalib. I have not heard that he enticed away Sher Ali's [975] wife." None of the other accused said anything about the matter.

As regards the witnesses for the prosecution, four of them appear to have been cross-examined on the point. Mir Abdullah said : "Khan Ghalib had a separate lodging of his own. That was because he had a wife. I don't know her name. I know Sher Ali, my wife's brother. I heard that Sher Ali put away his wife, and Ghalib Khan married her. I can't say whether that wife is at Bhadresar or has gone back to her home. Khan Sadik is the son of another wife. * * * It is not true that the quarrel arose from the refusal of those persons to drink sherbet at the hands of Khan Sadik because his father was living in adultery without nikah with a woman."

Mir Azad said : "Khan Ghalib did not put up with us. He had a separate residence. I have heard of Malika Bibi, who lives with Khan Ghalib. I have never seen her. I don't go to Khan Ghalib's bari. It is not true that on the Friday I went to his dwelling and had a talk with Malika Bibi and brought Khan Ghalib into my lodging. I don't know Sher Ali who was husband of Malika Bibi. I know that Khan Ghalib brought a woman from our country. I hear she is his wife. I don't know that she is any one else's wife. * * * It is not true that Wafadar and five others came into our lodging on being invited to drink sherbet."

Khan Sadik says : "There was a woman living with my father. I don't know whether her name was Malika or Malka. She had been divorced by her husband and my father had married her. I was not present at the marriage. My father told me he had married her. Warrants did not come from Peshawar for their arrest. * * * My father brought the woman to Bhadresar seven or eight months before his death."

Matabdin says : "I know Malka Bibi; she is living at Bhadresar. I have never seen her in this country. I have seen her in our own country. She was the wife of Mir Abdullah's brother-in-law, Sher Ali. He was alive when I left my country. Khan Ghalib brought the woman from our country. She was living with him at Bhadresar. * * It is considered very bad in our country for a man to run away with another man's wife."

[976] This appears to be all the evidence on the point, and we think Mr. Ghose is right, therefore, when he says that there is no evidence that the attack upon Mir Abdullah's house was made with the object of chastising Khan Ghalib. Khan Ghalib's adulterous intercourse was referred to by Wafadar as being the cause of his refusing to drink sherbet at the hands of his son, which refusal he says was the immediate cause of the quarrel, and it is obvious that the cross-examination was directed to establish this point. It was not fair, therefore, to use a part of Wafadar's statement only and to convert a fact which he put forward in his defence into a motive for the attack. The statement, even as against those who made it, should be taken in its entirety and not a part of it only for the purpose of being turned against the accused; and, further, the statement was certainly no evidence against any of the accused other than those who made or adopted it. Yet the Judge has used it against all the accused without distinction. We agree, therefore, with Mr. Ghose that there was no evidence in support of the common object charged against the accused in the alternative allegation added by the Sessions Judge, and as the verdict of the Jury leaves it uncertain whether they did not intend to find that this was the common object which actuated the accused, that verdict is bad in law.

It is necessary, however, to consider whether, having regard to the provisions of s. 423, clause (d) of the Code, we are bound to reverse the verdict of a Jury, unless we are of opinion that it is erroneous, or, in other words, wrong. The point was argued at the bar, and Mr. Leith, on the part of the Crown, further invited our attention to s. 537 of the Code, which prescribes that, "subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding * * * passed by a competent Court shall be reversed * * * on appeal * * * on account of any misdirection in any charge to a Jury unless such * * * misdirection * * * has occasioned a failure of justice." Mr. Leith accordingly asks us to go into the evidence and to decide upon the facts whether or not the accused have been rightly convicted.

We are of opinion that it is not open to us to adopt this course, and we are not aware of any case in which it has been followed. Section 418 of the Code provides that, where the trial is by jury, [977] an appeal shall lie on a matter of law only. It is quite clear, therefore, that we have no power to try the accused in this appeal on matters of fact. Clause (d) of s. 423 runs as follows: "Nothing herein contained shall authorize the Court to alter or reverse the verdict of a Jury, unless it is of opinion that such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge, or to a misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by him." In this clause, as it seems to us, the word "erroneous" is not to be read as meaning "wrong on the facts;" it must rather be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law. The effect of the clause is evidently to prevent the appellate Court from reversing the verdict of a Jury on account of any misdirection by the Judge or any misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by him, unless such misdirection or misunderstanding of the law is on a point material to the verdict, so that the verdict can be said to be tainted with error in the process by which it has been arrived at. It throws on the appellate Court the duty no doubt of ascertaining whether the process or method which the Judge directed the Jury to follow as to the acceptance or discarding of evidence or as to the view taken of the law was erroneous on any material point, but not certainly the duty of determining for itself whether the verdict, as a conclusion of fact, was right or wrong. To hold otherwise would be tantamount to holding that an appeal would lie upon the facts from the verdict of a Jury in the face of the provisions of s. 418, and that the Legislature intended to give this Court the same powers in respect to an appeal from the verdict of a Jury as it has in respect of a judgment by the Sessions Judge in a trial with assessors. In his contention that this was the object of the Legislature Mr. Leith has referred to s. 307 of the Code, under which section the High Court is authorized to go into the facts. But it is to be observed that that section expressly and designedly confers upon the Court higher powers than it can exercise on appeal under the provisions of s. 423.

A very similar point was recently before the Judicial Committee [978] of the Privy Council in the case of Makin v. Attorney General for New South Wales already referred to. In that case, the question was raised whether, under the proviso to s. 423 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Act of 1883, where the Judge who tries a case reserves for the opinion of the Supreme Court the question whether evidence was improperly admitted, and the Court comes to the conclusion that it was not legally admissible, the Court can, nevertheless, affirm the judgment if it is of opinion that there was sufficient evidence to support the conviction, independently of the evidence improperly admitted, and that the accused was guilty of the offence with which he was charged. The proviso in question runs as follows: "Provided that no conviction or judgment thereon shall be reversed, arrested or avoided on any case so stated, unless for some substantial wrong or other miscarriage of justice." The Privy Council held that the words of the proviso could not be given the construction contended for. To quote the words of the Lord Chancellor: "It is obvious that the construction contended for transfers from the Jury to the Court the determination of the question, whether the evidence—that is to say, what the law regards as evidence—established the guilt of the accused. The result is that in a case where the accused has the right to have his guilt or innocence tried by a Jury, the judgment passed upon him is made to depend, not on the finding of the Jury, but on a decision of the Court. The Judges are in truth substituted for the Jury, the verdict becomes theirs and theirs alone, and is arrived at upon a perusal of the evidence without any opportunity of seeing the demeanour of the witnesses, and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords."

"It is impossible to deny that such a change of the law would be a very serious one, and that the construction, which their Lordships are invited to put upon the enactment, would gravely affect the much cherished right of trial by Jury in criminal cases. The evidence, improperly admitted, might have chiefly influenced the Jury to return a verdict of guilty, and the rest of the evidence which might appear to the Court sufficient to support the conviction might have been reasonably disbelieved by the Jury in view of the demeanour of the witnesses. Yet the Court might [979] under such circumstances, be justified, or even consider themselves bound to let the judgment and sentence stand."

"These are startling consequences, which strongly tend in their Lordships' opinion to show that the language used in the proviso was not intended to apply to circumstances such as those under consideration.

"Their Lordships do not think it can properly be said that there has been no substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice, where on a point material to the guilt or innocence of the accused the Jury have, notwithstanding objection, been invited by the Judge to consider, in arriving at their verdict, matters which ought not to have been submitted to them.

"In their Lordships' opinion substantial wrong would be done to the accused, if he were deprived of the verdict of a Jury on the facts proved by legal evidence, and there were substituted for it the verdict of the Court founded merely upon a perusal of the evidence."

For these reasons we are of opinion that, having come to the conclusion that the verdict of the Jury in this case has been vitiated by the misdirection of the Sessions Judge, we have no option but to set aside that verdict and to direct that the accused be retried.

RAMJEEVAN KOORMI (Complainant) v. DURGA CHARAN SADHU KHAN (Accused).* [4th July, 1894.]

Criminal Procedure Code (Act X of 1882), s. 560—Compensation—Imprisonment in default of payment of compensation—Distress.

The operation of s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is restricted to cases instituted by "complaint" as defined in the Code or upon information given to a police officer or a Magistrate, and consequently that section has [980] no application to a case instituted on a police report or on information given by a police officer.

Quære--Whether under the section a Magistrate has power to make an order for imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation awarded?

A police constable arrested a carter and charged him before a Magistrate with an offence under s. 34 of Act V of 1861. The Magistrate acquitted the accused and directed, under s. 560 of the Code, that the police constable should pay him Rs. 20 as compensation or undergo simple imprisonment for a fortnight.

Held, that as the section had no application to the case, the order was illegal being made without jurisdiction.

Held, further, that even if the Magistrate had power under the Code to pass an order for imprisonment in default of payment of compensation awarded under s. 560, it was illegal to pass such an order until some attempt had been made to levy the amount in the manner provided by s. 386 for the levying of a fine.

[F., 22 B. 934 (935); 22 C. 586 (589); 5 C.W.N. 370 (371); R., 26 M. 127 (129) = 2 Weir. 321 (322); U.B.R. (1897-1901) 68 (70) Cr.]

THIS was a reference by the District Magistrate of Hooghly, under s. 437 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, questioning the legality of an order passed by a Deputy Magistrate under the provisions of s. 560 of that Code, directing a police constable, who had arrested and charged a carter with an offence under cl. 3, s. 34 of Act V of 1861, and who had failed to prove such charge, to pay the carter Rs. 20 as compensation or undergo simple imprisonment for a fortnight.

* Criminal Reference No. 170 of 1894, made by F.W. Duke, Esq., Officiating District Magistrate of Hooghly, dated the 20th June 1894, against the order passed by Moulvie, A.K.M. Abdus Sobhan, Deputy Magistrate of Hooghly, dated the 29th May 1894.

The reference was in the following terms:—

"I have the honor, under s. 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code, to forward, for the orders of the Hon'ble Court, the proceedings in a case under s. 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code against Ramjeevan constable tried by Moulvie A. K. M. Abdus Sobhan, Deputy Magistrate with first class powers.

"The proceedings form part of the record (Empress v. Durga Churan Sadhukhan) under s. 34 of Act V of 1861, in which the said Ramjeevan had arrested and given evidence against the accused.

"The facts are as follows: The constable found a cart untended in the Khurna Bazar of Chinsurah, and when the driver appeared, arrested him and caused his prosecution under cl. 3 of s. 34 of Act V of 1861.

"The Deputy Magistrate found that the accused's absence from his cart was brief and did not constitute an offence under the section [981] quoted, and accordingly acquitted him. I think that his finding that the admitted fact of the carter leaving his cart untended, in the circumstances of time and place, did not amount to an offence was wrong, but I do not propose to trouble the Court with this trivial matter save in so far as it affects the question of compensation.

"The Deputy Magistrate, however, also drew up a proceeding under s. 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and ordered the arresting constable to pay Rs. 20 compensation to the accused, or to undergo simple imprisonment for a fortnight in default.

"The points I would submit for the consideration of the Court are:—

"(1) Whether s. 560 of the Criminal Procedure Code is applicable at all to a police officer arresting an accused person for a cognizable offence?

"(2) Whether the order imposing 15 days' imprisonment in default of payment is legal?

"(3) That the Deputy Magistrate's proceeding is bad inasmuch as no objection has been recorded as required by s. 560, cl. (1) a, although one was made as appears from the proceeding.

"(4) That in any case the compensation is excessive and totally out of proportion to the circumstances of the parties, to any inconvenience suffered by the accused, or to any wrong-doing committed by the constable.

"As regards the first point I would only say that it is of the first importance that it should be decided whether s. 560 is applicable to a police officer arresting for an offence for which he has power to arrest. The words of the section are, "in any case instituted by complaint as defined in this Code, or upon information given to a police officer, or to a Magistrate." The case was instituted neither on complaint nor upon information given. The accused was arrested by the police officer, in whose view the offence was committed, and therefore there was neither complaint nor information. The section is evidently framed so as to exclude police officers acting under colour of their duty from its operation.

[982] "As regards the second point, the words of the section, cl. 2, has provided that if it (the fine) cannot be recovered the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple.

"Imprisonment is intended to be resorted to as a final measure if the compensation cannot be recovered by other means. An order for imprisonment made concurrently with the order for compensation, involving as it does immediate imprisonment if the compensation is not paid on the spot, seems to be bad. It is clearly intended that an attempt shall first be made to effect recovery by distraint.

"I have already noted that the Deputy Magistrate has not recorded the objections offered by the constable as he was bound to do. He has contented himself with saying that the constable could not show any good cause.

"Lastly, as regards the amount of compensation, the Deputy Magistrate has found that the accused left his cart for a while in the Khurna Bazar, a narrow and crowded street. This certainly appears to be an offence under the 3rd cl. of s. 34 of Act V of 1861, but the Deputy Magistrate thinks not. He finds fault because there is not corroborative evidence of actual damage or obstruction, though under the law only the probability of damage or obstruction is required, and these might have been sufficiently inferred from the circumstances of the case; and in any case it is not the arresting constable who is responsible for the production of evidence. However, he considers the constable acted without discretion in making the arrest. Admitting that he did, and that the accused is entitled to compensation, there is no reason for compensation of Rs. 20. The accused was detained from his arrest to his acquittal between 8 A.M. and 4 P.M. 8 hours. The accused was detained in custody, because he could not furnish bail, but the constable is not responsible for that. His loss of time allowing for his carts and bullocks may be estimated at not exceeding Re. 1. With three times that sum he would have been amply compensated for all the loss and inconvenience he suffered. He had no legal nor any other expenses in the case.

"The amount again is nearly equal to three months' pay of the constable, and is as excessive for him to pay as unnecessary for the [983] complainant to receive. It is, in fact, a penal or vindictive fine and not compensation."

Ramjeevan Koormi did not appear at the hearing of the reference.

The Deputy Legal Remembrancer (Mr. Leith) at the request of the Court on behalf of the Crown:—As regards the question as to whether under s. 560 it is competent for a Court to award imprisonment in default of payment of compensation at the time of ordering compensation to be paid, I contend that it is within the Court's power to do so. By s. 250 of Act X of 1882, repealed by Act IV of 1891, as well as by s. 560, compensation is made recoverable "as if it were a fine." By s. 209 of Act X of 1872, and by s. 270 of Act XXV of 1861, this was not so. As to recovery of fines, see s. 33 and s. 389 of Act X of 1882. Imprisonment is ordered as "a process for enforcing the payment of a fine" [see Empress v. Asghar Ali (1), and s. 552 and sch. V, Form XXX of Act X of 1882, and also s. 69 of the Penal Code], and must therefore be equally a process for the recovery of compensation awarded under the section.

The judgment of the High Court (BEVERLEY and BANERJEE, JJ.) was as follows:—

JUDGMENT.

One Durga Charan Sadhu Khan was arrested without warrant by constable Ramjeevan for an offence under cl. 3 of s. 34 of Act V of 1861. The Deputy Magistrate, who tried the case, acquitted Durga Charan, and under the provisions of s. 560 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, ordered the constable "to pay Rs. 20 as compensation to the accused, or undergo simple imprisonment for a fortnight."

The District Magistrate has asked us to exercise our powers of revision in the case on four grounds: (1) That s. 560 of the Code is not applicable to a police officer arresting an accused person for a cognizable offence; (2) that the order imposing imprisonment in default of payment is illegal; (3) that sub-s. (1) proviso (a) has not been complied with; (4) that the compensation awarded is excessive and out of proportion to the circumstances of the parties, to any inconvenience suffered by the accused, or to any wrong-doing committed by the constable.

[984] On the first ground, we think it is quite clear that the order complained of is illegal. Section 191 of the Code authorizes certain Magistrates to take cognizance of an offence—(a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence; (b) upon a police report of such facts; (c) upon information received from any person, other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence has been committed.

"Complaint" is defined in s. 4, cl. (a), and that definition in express terms excludes the report of a police officer. The operation of s. 560 is restricted to cases instituted "by complaint as defined by this Code, or upon information given to a police officer or to a Magistrate. It is clear that it will not apply to a case instituted on a police report or on information given by a police officer. The Deputy Magistrate therefore had no jurisdiction to make any order under that section in this case, and the order is for that reason illegal.

As regards the order for imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation, it is to be observed that the section itself does not expressly authorize the Magistrate to award such imprisonment. All that the section says on this point is contained in sub-s. (2) which runs as follows:—

"Compensation, of which a Magistrate has ordered payment under sub-s. (1), shall be recoverable as if it were a fine.

"Provided that, if it cannot be recovered, the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term, not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs."

By s. 209 of the Code (Act X) of 1872, authority was expressly given to award imprisonment if the compensation could not be realized. The third clause of that section runs as follows:—

"The sum so awarded shall be recoverable by distress and sale of the moveable property belonging to the complainant which may be found within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District, and such order shall authorize the distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the complainant without the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District, when the order has been endorsed by the Magistrate of the District in which such property is situated, and if the sum awarded cannot be realized by [985] means of such distress by imprisonment of the complainant in the civil jail for any time not exceeding thirty days unless such sum is sooner paid."

In the Code of 1882, the wording of the corresponding section, viz., s. 250, now repealed, was altered, and the words expressly authorizing the levy of the fine by imprisonment were for some reason omitted, nor have they been reproduced in s. 560 of the Code, which now takes the place of s. 250. Mr. Leith, whom we have heard on this point, suggests that imprisonment is to be regarded as one of the ordinary modes of recovery of a fine, but we are not aware of any provision of the law under which a fine is recoverable by imprisonment. Section 386 prescribes that a fine, if not paid, may be levied by distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the offender, but is silent in respect of any other mode of recovering the fine. The power to award imprisonment, in default of payment of a fine, in the case of an offence, is contained in s. 64 of the Penal Code, but that section only refers to cases in which a person is sentenced to pay a fine for an offence and will not apply to an order to pay compensation. Similarly, s. 33 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, only relates to cases in which imprisonment, in default of payment of a fine, is authorized by law in case of default.

As s. 560 of the Code stands, therefore, we think it extremely doubtful whether the Deputy Magistrate had any jurisdiction at all to make an order for imprisonment in default of payment of the compensation. But, however that may be, we think it clear that such an order could not be made in the terms in which it has been made in this case. Under s. 209 of the Code of 1872, the order for imprisonment could only be made if the compensation could not be realized by distress, and the words of s. 560 of the present Code are to the same effect—"if it cannot be recovered." See also the cases of Bisheswar Shaha v. Bishwambhur Sircar (1), and Queen v. Gopai (2).*

Therefore, even if the Deputy Magistrate had jurisdiction [986] to make an order for imprisonment, it was illegal to make such an order until some attempt had been made to levy the amount.

For these reasons, we think that the order of the Deputy Magistrate is bad in law, and we set it aside accordingly. We think it unnecessary to consider the other grounds urged by the District Magistrate.

SHITAL MONDAL (Defendant) v. PROSSONNAMOYI
DEBYA AND OTHERS (Plaintiffs).† [31st July, 1894.]

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 30, cl. (a)—Suit for enhancement of rent—Prevailing rate—Meaning of—Average rate.

The words "prevailing rate" in s. 30, cl. (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, mean, not the average rate of rent but the rate actually paid and current in the village for land of a similar description with similar advantages; they should be construed, therefore, in the same sense as was given to the same words in the earlier cases decided under Act X of 1859.

[R., 6 C.W.N. 710.]

THE facts of this case and the points material to the report sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Judge which confirmed the Munsif's decision and which was as follows:—

(2) 2 N. W. P. (All.) H. C. 430.

* See the case of Queen-Empress v. Kutrapī, 18 B. 440.—Ed.

† Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 167 of 1894, against the decree of C. A. Wilkins, Esq., District Judge of 24-Perganas, dated the 20th of November 1893, affirming the decree of Babu Tarak Chunder Dass, Munsif of Basirhat, dated the 6th of September 1892.

" This is an enhancement suit brought under the provisions of s. 30 (a) and s. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, against an occupancy ryot. The defendant holds 19½ bighas at a jama of between Rs. 6 and Rs. 7. The plaintiff claimed enhancement to a rate of Rs. 2 per bigha. The Munsif decreed an enhanced rate of Rs. 1-8 per bigha, and the defendant now appeals. The question of enhancement is the sole question taken in appeal. The first ground of appeal to the effect that the lands are 'protected from enhancement' is admitted by the appellant's pleader to mean merely that defendant has held a long time at the old rate; he admits for his client that there is no legal protection.

" The Munsif's judgment is based mainly, if not entirely, upon the report of a Commissioner, who was appointed under the provisions of s. 31 (6) [987] of the Tenancy Act to hold a local enquiry. That report, with the evidence taken by the Commissioner, are evidence in the suit, and form part of the record (s. 393 of the Civil Procedure Code).

" The Commissioner examined sixteen witnesses who, as is inevitable in such cases, give very discrepant accounts as to what is the prevailing rate in the village. In order to push his enquiry as far as possible, he examined witnesses as to the rents paid in kind; he reduced these rents to cash at a fair rate, and came to the conclusion that, upon the whole, the prevailing rate for such lands as those in suit was Rs. 1-8 per bigha.

" It is contended for the appellant that the Commissioner has calculated the prevailing rate solely on the comparison made with lands paying rent in kind. This is not so.

" The question is whether the evidence justifies the conclusion that the 'prevailing rate' in the village for similar lands is Rs. 1-8. That evidence seems to me to show that there are several rates, but I can find nothing which proves that any one rate prevails more than another—a rate in fact which is paid by the majority of the ryots in the village. Nor is it necessary to find this under the present law; for, in order to determine the 'prevailing rate,' it is permissible, and indeed necessary, to have regard to the 'rates' generally paid; in fact cl. (a) of s. 31 presupposes the existence of more rates than one.

" Still the Act does not allow the Courts to strike an average of different rates current in the village, in order to ascertain the enhanced rate payable, except in very special cases. Such a special case would be where a landlord proves that the lands are held at a rent below their value, and when a distinctly prevailing rate cannot be found on account of the currency of different and nearly equal rates. In such a case the Court might justly take an average—Dena Gaze v. Mohinee Mohun Doss (1).

" What does the evidence in the present case show? To my mind it does not go beyond asserting that different ryots held at different rates; it does not go so far as to establish that any one rate is, or that more rates than one are, prevalent in the village. No two witnesses agree. The landlord does not produce his jamabandi to help to a correct decision, and all that we have to rely upon is the oral evidence in the case, and that evidence, shows that there are several rates current (although none in particular is 'prevalent'). What I gather from the evidence is that originally the village rate was very low; but that for several years past fresh settlements have been made at enhanced rates, varying from Re. 1 to Rs. 1-8 and more. This seems therefore one of those special cases in which under the old law the Court would be justified in striking an average in order to determine the enhanced rent payable by the defendant. It does not appear to me that the present law materially differs from that laid down in the later decisions of the High [988] Court under the old law. The Courts are to 'have regard to the rates generally paid,' during the three years preceding the institution of the suit. I can find no reasonable interpretation of these words other than this, that the Courts, looking to what other tenants of similar lands in the village have been paying, shall determine what the defendant will in future pay, and shall not necessarily say that that rent is to be enhanced up to the limit of any of the prevailing rates.

"Acting upon this principle, I find that the decision of the Munsif is reasonable and proper, and I accordingly confirm his decree and dismiss this appeal with costs."

From this decision the defendant appealed to the High Court, mainly on the ground that the Judge having held that there was no prevailing rate in the village, and the plaintiff therefore having failed in his opinion to prove the "prevailing rate," within the meaning of cl. (a) of s. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the suit ought to have been dismissed; and that the Judge was wrong in law in striking an average of the rates found current in the village.

Babu Grish Chunder Chowdhry, for the appellant.

Babu Opendra Chunder Bose and Babu Shib Prosunno Bhattacharji, for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court (O'KINEALY and HILL, JJ.) was as follows :—

JUDGMENT.

This is an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of the 24-Perganas. It arises out of an action under s. 30 of the Rent Law, seeking to enhance the rent of a tenant under cl. (a) of that section, which says that "the landlord of a holding may sue for enhancement if the rate of rent paid by the ryot is below the prevailing rate paid by occupancy ryots for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the same village, and that there is no sufficient reason for his holding at so low a rate."

In the Court below the Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had not succeeded in proving any prevailing rate; but upon the authority of a case of Dena Gaze v. Mohinee Mohun Doss (1), he held that he might, in this particular case, take the average of the different rates current in the village and treat that as the prevailing rate. That, no doubt, was a peculiar case; [989] but with the exception of that case, in all other cases, from the case of Shadhoo Singh v. Ramanoograha Lall (2) upwards, the rate actually paid and current in the village has always been taken to mean the "prevailing" and not the "average" rate. In the new Act the words "prevailing" and "average" are used in different senses in different sections. In s. 30, for instance, reference is made to the "prevailing rate;" in s. 32 reference is made to "average prices" and not "prevailing prices;" in s. 40, sub-s. 4, cl. (a), the terms "average money rent," and in cl. (b) the "average value of the rent" are mentioned as distinct from "prevailing rate." We think, therefore, that the words "prevailing rate" in this case are used in the same sense in which they are used in the earlier cases under Act X of 1859.

(1) 21 W.R. 157.

The result is that this appeal is decreed, the decision of the lower appellate Court is set aside, and the plaintiff's suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Mesne profits—Execution of decree in suit for possession—Execution pending appeal—Reversal of decree on appeal and restoration of possession—Right to restitution of mesne profits—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 583—Separate suit.

R brought a suit against K for possession of certain land, and obtained a decree. K appealed, but pending the appeal R took possession of the land in execution of his decree. K was successful in the appeal, and was restored to possession in execution of the decree of the appellate Court, which, however, was silent as to mesne profits. He was entitled to such restitution, either by reason of the power conferred by s. 583 of the Civil Procedure Code upon the Court which passed the decree [Kalianasundram v. Egnavedeswara (1)], or by reason of the inherent right that the Court has to order the restitution of the thing which has been improperly taken under the erroneous decree set aside in appeal [*Mookoond Lal Pal Chowdhry v. In this case Raja Singh and others brought a suit for possession of some immovable property against Kooldip Singh and others, and obtained a decree. The defendants in that case appealed from that decree, but, before the disposal of the appeal, the plaintiffs obtained possession of the land in execution of the decree they had obtained. The appeal was eventually decided in favour of the three defendants, Kooldip Singh and others, who, under the decree of the appellate Court, recovered possession of the land; and they now claimed mesne profits for the time they were kept out of possession. The decree of the appellate Court was silent as to the mesne profits.

The only question material to this report was whether such mesne profits could be recovered in execution of the decree, or whether a fresh suit must be brought for them.

The Munsif relied on the cases of Ram Ghulam v. Dwarka Rai (3), and Azizuddin Hossein v. Ramanugra Roy (4); and held that the question could not be tried in the execution proceedings.

On appeal the Judge said :—

Bench, because the balance of our judgment was rather to agree with the Allahabad case than with the cases decided by Division Benches of this Court; but after hearing the learned vakil for the respondents, we are satisfied that there is no necessity for our so referring this case, indeed not only that there is no necessity but that we ought not to do it.' The law in Bengal, therefore, remains as it was laid down in the case of Lati Kooer v. Sobadra Kooer (1), in which all the previous decisions were considered, and the principle enunciated by the Privy Council in Lilanand Singh v. Luckimpur Singh (2) that the right to mesne profits was consequential on the possession given by the decree, was approved. Sir Barnes Peacock is quoted as saying: 'The decree of reversal necessarily carries with it the right [991] to restitution of all that has been taken under the erroneous decree in the same manner as an ordinary decree carries with it a right to have it executed; but the actual ruling in this case is that upon the application for execution of an appellate Court's decree reversing a previous decree, it was competent for the Court to cause restitution to be made of all that the party against whom the erroneous decree had been enforced had been deprived of by such enforcement. The law, therefore, appears to be that the recovery of mesne profits in such cases may be made either under s. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code, or by regular suit, and the Munsif's judgment that the question cannot be tried in the execution proceedings is consequently wrong, and must be reversed. The appeal is decreed with costs.'

Raja Singh and others, the judgment-debtors, appealed to the High Court, on the ground that the Judge should have held that the mesne profits claimed were not recoverable in execution but only by a separate suit.

Dr. Rash Behari Ghose and Baboo Dwarkanath Chuckerbutty, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.

The facts out of which this appeal arises are shortly these: One Raja Singh and some other individuals brought a suit against Kooldip Narain Singh and others for recovery of possession of certain property, and obtained a decree in the Court of first instance. The defendants appealed to the higher Court, but during the pendency of the appeal the plaintiffs took possession of the property in question in execution of the decree of the first Court. The appeal was ultimately decreed in favour of the defendants, and thereupon they were restored to possession; and they subsequently applied to the Court for recovery of mesne profits from the plaintiffs for the period during which the latter were unlawfully in possession.

The contention that seems to have been raised in the Courts below was whether the defendants, decree-holders, were entitled to recover mesne profits from the plaintiffs in execution of the decree of the appellate Court under s. 244 of the Code, or whether their only remedy was not to bring a separate suit for that relief.

[992] The learned District Judge has held, in reversal of the order of the Court of first instance, that the mesne profits in question might be recovered either under s. 244 or by a separate suit; and he has accordingly held that the defendants, decree-holders, were entitled to recover mesne profits from the plaintiffs in execution of the decree of the appellate Court.

(1) 3 C. 720.

(2) 5 B.L.R. 605=13 M.I.A. 490.

Several cases were referred to by the learned vakils on either side in the course of the argument before us, and we have consulted various other cases upon the subject.

In the case of Hurro Chunder Roy Chowdhry v. Sooradhoonee Dabea (1) decided by a Full Bench of this Court, Sir Barnes Peacock observed that upon a decree for possession being reversed in appeal by the appellate Court, it is competent to the Court to cause restitution to be made of all that the party against whom the erroneous decree had been enforced was deprived by such enforcement. The immediate question in that case was no doubt different from that which we have to consider in the present case; but it was such that the Full Bench had necessarily to consider what may be the relief which a successful appellant is entitled to by way of restitution. Sir Barnes Peacock, in the course of his judgment, observed as follows: "The decree of reversal necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been taken under the erroneous decree in the same manner as an ordinary decree carries with it a right to have it executed; and I should have considered that a decree of reversal necessarily authorized the lower Court to cause restitution to be made of all that the party against whom the erroneous decree had been enforced had been deprived by reason of its having been enforced. The Sudder Court ordered that the lands were to remain with the plaintiff. It did not order the lands to be restored to her; but the necessary consequence was that restitution was to be made, and restitution of the lands was made by the Principal Sudder Amin without any objection. There seems to be no reason why he should not have restored to the plaintiff the rents and profits of which she was deprived during the time she was kept out of possession of her land under the erroneous decree."

[993] This principle seems to have been accepted and followed in Shib Narayan Pohraj v. Kishore Narayan Pohraj (2); Hamida v. Bhudhun (3); Ununt Ram Hazrah v. Kuralee Pershad Mistree (4); Lati Kooer v. Sobadra Kooer (5); and Mookoond Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Mahamed Sami Meah (6). And it seems to have been uniformly held in this Court that a Court reversing a decree, under which possession of property had been taken, has power to order restitution of the property taken possession of, and with it any mesne profits which may have accrued during such possession.

The learned vakil for the appellant, however, relied upon the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ram Ghulam v. Dwarka Rai (7), which no doubt may at first sight appear to have taken a contrary view, but upon closer examination it will be found that it is not so. There, the plaintiff had sought for possession of certain immovable property, and obtained a decree, and in execution of that decree obtained possession. The decree was subsequently reversed on appeal by the defendant. The decree of the appellate Court was silent in respect of mesne profits, which the plaintiff had received while in possession, and the defendant instituted a suit to recover such profits. The question which seems to have been discussed in that case was whether the suit was not barred by s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and it was held by Petheram, C.J., and the other Judges who composed the Full Bench, that the suit was not so barred. The Chief Justice, however, expressed a doubt whether the defendant, the successful appellant, could have recovered mesne profits in execution of his decree, and he was of opinion that, although the question before the Court arose out of the decree, it did not relate to "the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree," within the meaning of s. 244. What we understand was really decided in that case was that the suit for the recovery of the mesne profits was not barred by the provisions of s. 244 of the Code. The case [994] of Mookoond Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Mahomed Sami Meah (1), to which we have already referred, came before Petheram, C.J., and Ghose, J.; and the Chief Justice, in delivering the judgment of the Court, and with reference to the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Ram Ghulam v. Dwarka Rai (2), observed as follows: "A decision of the Allahabad High Court, in which I took part, has been cited, in which it was held that the section of the Code does not prevent the person who has been wrongfully deprived of his property by this proceeding from bringing an action to recover the profits during the time he has been wrongfully kept out of possession, and speaking for myself I still adhere to the opinion which I then expressed that such an action may be maintained." And later on, with reference to the question whether the defendant in that suit was entitled by way of restitution to the mesne profits, which the plaintiff had recovered during the time when he was in unlawful possession, the learned Chief Justice observed as follows: "But if such an action can be maintained, it by no means follows that the Court which has given possession under the wrong decree, which has afterwards been cancelled, cannot order restitution of the property which has been wrongfully taken, and any mesne profits which may have been derived from it in the meantime. Speaking for myself I do not think that this restitution is a proceeding which comes within the meaning of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but I think it is an inherent right in the Court itself to prevent its proceedings being made any cause of injustice or oppression to any one, and therefore it seems to me that that inherent right does exist, and that the Court has power under that inherent right to order restitution of the thing which has been improperly taken, and as a part of that power it must have the right and the power to order restitution of every thing which has been improperly taken. If they have that power, they have the power not only to order restitution of the property itself, but restitution of any proceeds which have been improperly taken during the time that it was in the possession of the person who was not entitled to it. These proceeds which have been received [995] are the mesne profits of the property, and, therefore, it seems to me, it being admitted that there is a power in the Courts to order restitution of the property, it must follow that they have the power to order restitution of the mesne profits."

The result in that case was that the defendant was held entitled by way of restitution to obtain the mesne profits which the plaintiff had realized during the time that he was in unlawful possession of the property under the decree which was set aside on appeal.

We may in this connection refer to two other cases which were decided by the Privy Council. In Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (3) where money had been paid under a decree which was subsequently reversed on appeal, the Privy Council held that the successful appellant was entitled to a refund of the money with interest for the period during which the said money was unlawfully in the hands of the plaintiff. The Judicial Committee in delivering judgment observed as follows: "It is contended, on the part of the respondents here, that the principal sum being restored to the present petitioners, they have no right to recover from them any interest. It is obvious that, if that is so, injury, and very grave injury, will be done to the petitioners. They will, by reason of an act of the Court, have paid a sum which it is now ascertained was ordered to be paid by mistake and wrongfully. They will recover that sum after the lapse of a considerable time, but they will recover it without the ordinary fruits which are derived from the enjoyment of money. On the other hand, those fruits will have been enjoyed, or may have been enjoyed, by the person who by mistake and by wrong obtained possession of the money under a judgment which has been reversed. So far, therefore, as principle is concerned, their Lordships have no doubt or hesitation in saying that injustice will be done to the petitioners, and that the perfect judicial determination, which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at, unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them, with interest during the time that the money has been withheld." And later on they observed: [996] "Their Lordships have reason to believe that the practice of the Courts in India, when there has been a reversal in this country, and when money has been ordered in India to be paid back in consequence of that reversal, is to order the payment of interest. Their Lordships, therefore, so far as any precedents applicable to the case are concerned, believe that the precedents will be found in favour of a restitution of the money with interest." In the case of Shama Pershad Roy Chowdhry v. Furro Pershad Roy Chowdhry (1), where money had been paid under a decree which was reversed on appeal, it was held that it was recoverable either by a new suit or by summary process, and the Judicial Committee ordered the money to be refunded, with interest from the date of payment, to the plaintiff. These cases no doubt are not parallel to the case we have before us, but the principle which underlies them is, we think, equally applicable to this case.

(2) 10 A. 170.

(3) L.R. 3 P.O. 465.

It may, we think, be well doubted whether this restitution could be had under the provisions of s. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Indeed, we are inclined to think that the wording of that section does not cover it. There is, however, another section of the Code of Civil Procedure under which the restitution might probably be had, and that is s. 583. It runs as follows: "When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this Chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decree in suits." And we observe that in the case of Kalianasundram v. Egnavedeswara (2), the Madras High Court has approvingly quoted the decision of this Court in Mookoond Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Mahomed Sami Meah (3), and has held that mesne profits could be recovered in execution by way of restitution under s. 583 of the Code.

We also observe that the Bombay High Court, in the case of Balvantrav Oze v. Sadrudin (1), has held that the procedure provided by [997] s. 583 of the Code is not confined to cases where the restitution desired is provided for by the decree itself.

It follows from all the cases that we have referred to that the successful appellant is entitled by way of restitution to the mesne profits recovered by the plaintiff during the time of his unlawful possession, by an application in the suit itself, whether it be by reason of the power conferred upon the Court which made the decree under s. 583, has held by the Madras High Court, or by reason of the inherent right that the Court has to order restitution of the thing which has been improperly taken under the erroneous decree set aside in appeal, as held by Petheram, C.J., in Mookond Lal Pal Chowdhry v. Mahomed Sami Meah (2). As we have already said the cases in this Court are all in one way, and therefore it is now too late to ask us to disturb the current of rulings upon the subject.

The result is that this appeal will be dismissed with costs.

PRESENT :

Lord Hobhouse, Lord Macnaghten, Lord Morris and Sir R. Couch.

[On appeal from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

UMRAO BEGUM (Plaintiff) v. IRSHAD HUSAIN AND ANOTHER
(Defendants).^{*} [7th, 9th and 30th June, 1894.]

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), s. 22, sub-s. 4 and 7—Taluk inherited by a daughter's son—Revivor of an appeal which had abated.

The taluk to which the succession was in dispute was one of those entered in the first and second of the lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, descending to a single heir by primogeniture. The last talukdar died without leaving a son, but left a widow, and by a former wife two daughters of whom the elder had a son. The widow's claim to an estate for life, under sub-s. 17 of s. 22 of the above Act, was met by the defence that the daughter's son, having been treated by his maternal grandfather in all respects as his own son, was, under sub-s. 4, entitled to inherit the taluk. The Courts below decided in his favour.

[998] Held, that the Courts below were right as to the treatment of the daughter's son, in regard to sub-s. 4. Pertab Narain Singh v. Subhao Koor (3) did not show that sub-s. 4 had been construed to require evidence on that point attaining to any special degree.

Leave to revive the widow's appeal, which abated on her death before the hearing, was obtained by the younger daughter of the deceased talukdar, one of the defendants; she being next among those who would have a claim to inherit the taluk in succession should the appeal be decreed.

Held, that the appellant by revivor must be restricted to the suit for the taluk, and could not advance, on this appeal, any claim of her own which she might have preferred in a suit to inherit property which had belonged to the deceased other than the talukdari estate.

APPEAL from a decree (21st March 1888) of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, affirming a decree (25th April 1887) of the District Judge of Lucknow.

This appeal related to a taluk named Narauli in the Bara Banki district, to which the succession was regulated by the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, the taluk having been entered in lists I and II, prepared in conformity with s. 8, as one of those which, on and before the 13th February 1856, ordinarily devolved upon a single heir. The last owner had died without a son, leaving a widow, and two daughters by a former wife, the elder of the daughters having a son who survived his maternal grandfather. The taluk fell within one or other of the sub-sections of s. 22. The widow claimed her estate for life in it under sub-s. 7; and the main question on this appeal was whether or not the lower Courts had rightly decided that her claim to the taluk had been defeated by the daughter's son having been brought within the operation of sub-s. 4, that son having been treated by the late talukdar, in all respects, as his own son. The suit was brought on the 30th July 1886 by the widow, Ahmadi Begum, through her father Saiyad Mahomed Abud, she being of unsound mind. Her husband, the last talukdar, Chowdhri Raza Hossein, died intestate on the 22nd November 1885, having inherited the taluk from his father Husain Buksb, whose name, as talukdar, was entered in the lists. Besides the taluk, the plaintiff claimed a life estate, "according to custom," for the widow in lands not talukdari, and in the moveables.

[999] Of Raza's two daughters, Sarfraz and Umrao, the former, the elder, was married, but lived in her father's house, where a son named Sajjad was born to her. He was in his fifth year when Raza died, and in his name, on the 4th June 1886, dakhil kharij of the taluk was made. Both he and his mother died while this suit was pending in the Court below. In lieu of Sajjad the name of Irshad, his younger brother and next heir to the taluk, was entered on the record. The defence made for Sajjad was that he had a title under sub-s. 4. It was also alleged for him that the plaintiff, as a childless widow, was not entitled under the Imamia law, the parties being Shias, to the immovable property of her husband, and that by custom also the moveable property followed the taluk. The District Judge found that it had been shown that Raza so exceptionally treated his daughter's son Sajjad as to give him in the family the place and pre-eminence which would have belonged to the talukdar's son had one existed; and was of opinion that this indicated that the talukdar desired that Sajjad should be his successor. This was ascertained by reference to statements of witnesses, to documents, admissions, and conduct at ceremonies. He therefore dismissed the suit for the taluk. As regards the other property referring to the Shia law that a childless widow cannot inherit (for which he cited Asloo v. Umdutoonissa (1), he held that this was governed, as regarded the taluk, by sub-s. 17. As to the moveables he referred to part of the judgment in Ishri Singh v. Baldeo Singh (2), to the effect that there was no evidence to show that the family property, other than the taluk, followed a line of devolution different from that of the taluk, holding that there was a resemblance in the cases on this point.

The Judicial Commissioner, dismissing an appeal on behalf of Ahmadi, found that Raza treated Sajjad in all respects as his own son, so far as so young a child could be treated; and that he had taken occasion many times to declare openly that Sajjad was to be his successor. He confined his judgment to question as to the taluk.

On the 30th November 1891 Ahmadi died. Her appeal, which [1000] proceeded on the ground that Sajjad had not, in fact, been so treated as to render sub-s. 4 applicable, abated on her death. On the 30th July 1892, an application was made by Umrao Begum, the surviving daughter of the late talukdar, for leave to revive the appeal.

Mr. J. D. Mayne, who appeared for the petitioner, relied on her being first in the order of possible heirs if, on the decision of the appeal, the judgment of the Courts below, as to the treatment of Sajjad, should be reversed. He referred to Kattama Nauchear v. Rajah of Shivaganga (1), in which case an order of revivor was made, giving leave to a daughter and her sisters to prosecute an appeal on grounds like the present. After hearing Mr. J. H. A. Branson for the objector, their Lordships granted the leave.

On the revived appeal,—

Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for Umrao Begum, argued that no preferential title had been established in the daughter's son, within sub-s. 4, over that of the surviving daughter. They referred to the judgment in Pertab Narain Singh v. Subbhao Kooer (2), and argued that the treatment of the daughter's son by the talukdar must, in order to render sub-s. 4 applicable, conform to the general construction put in that case upon this exceptional provision. Here, however, its treatment had been no other than would ordinarily be that of one only grandson, born in the house of a talukdar, and could not be referred to an intention to create the right of inheritance. That treatment had been only consistent with the talukdar's affection; and, as the child was already within the line of succession, and a possible heir, there was no such conduct towards him on the part of the talukdar as to give him the position of heir next entitled. This applied to the presentment of the child to the tenants. Mere statements and expressions, not accompanied by Acts, would be insufficient. It was not an uncommon thing in that part of the world for a married daughter to live with wealthy parents. It was necessary, in order to establish the defence, that the evidence should come up to the standard indicated in the case cited. It was submitted that the [1001] daughter was entitled to the taluk, and to that share of the whole estate of the late Raza which, according to Mahomedan law, would descend to his daughter.

Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. J. H. A. Branson, for the respondents, were not called upon.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment was afterwards, on June 30th, given by LORD HOBHOUSE.—The original plaintiff in this suit was Ahmadi Begum, the only surviving widow of Raza Hossein, talukdar of Narauli, who died in the year 1885, leaving no son. He had two daughters who survived him; the elder named Sarfraz, and the younger named Umrao, who is the present appellant. Sarfraz married Ahmed Hossein, who is one of the respondents, and at the death of Raza she had a son named Sajjad Hossein, then less than five years old, the original defendants in the suit were Sajjad, Sarfraz and Umrao.

which fall under the provisions of s. 22 of that Act. On Raza's death a claim was preferred on behalf of the child Sajjad, that he was entitled to the taluk under sub-s. 4, inasmuch as he had been treated by Raza in all respects as his own son. On that claim Sajjad got possession, and soon afterwards Ahmadi instituted this suit. The title is governed entirely by the question whether Sajjad was treated by Raza as a son. If he was, the taluk passed to him and his male lineal descendants by virtue of sub-s. 4. If not, it passed to Ahmadi for her life by virtue of sub-s. 7.

Ahmadi, Sarfraz, and Sajjad have all died since the institution of the suit. Sajjad has been replaced on the record by his brother Irshad. On the death of Ahmadi the appeal abated, and Umrao was allowed to revive it under circumstances on which their Lordships will presently make some remarks.

It is common ground that Sajjad's mother, Sarfraz, was after her marriage taken into Raza's house, and that Sajjad was born there, and from that time till Raza's death he was treated as a child of the house. Evidence was given of a number of incidents, [1002] some apparently trivial and some important, for the purpose of showing that Raza's treatment of Sajjad was that of a son. On Ahmadi's side it was contended that all those incidents were sufficiently accounted for by the circumstance that Sarfraz and her son were inmates of Raza's house, and that Sajjad was his grandson, and in the line of succession. The case appears to have been very elaborately examined by the Courts below; first by the District Judge of Lucknow, and afterwards by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. Both Courts held that Sajjad had been treated as a son by Raza, and that Ahmad's claim must be dismissed.

This is not only a question of fact, but it is one which embraces a great number of facts whose significance is best appreciated by those who are most familiar with Indian manners and customs. Their Lordships would be especially unwilling in such a case to depart from the general rule, which forbids a fresh examination of facts for the purpose of disturbing concurrent findings by the lower Courts. The Counsel for the appellant frankly admitted that they laboured under this difficulty, and that they must find some ground of law or general principle for impugning the decree.

To do this, they made some comments on the use made by the Courts below of Raza's oral statements, but those comments all resolved themselves into objections to the weight of evidence, and did not affect its admissibility. The only question of law or principle which they could suggest was founded on the language used by this Committee in deciding the well-known case of Man Singh's estate [Partab Narain Singh v. Subhao Koor (1).] It appears to have been pressed upon the Committee that the treatment required by the Oudh Estates Act must be something of the nature of adoption. In answer to that suggestion their Lordships pointed out that the section applies not to Hindus alone, but to all religions, and they continue as follows:—

"It is necessary, then, to put a general as well as rational construction upon the provision advisedly introduced by the Legislature into this statutory law of succession. And, taking the whole section together, their [1003] Lordships are of opinion that wherever it is shewn by sufficient evidence that a talukdar, not having male issue, has so exceptionally treated the son of a daughter as to give him in the family the place, consequence, and pre-eminence which would naturally belong to a son if one existed, and would not ordinarily be conceded to a daughter's son, and has thus indicated an intention that the person so treated shall be his successor, such person will be brought within the enactment in question."

Upon this passage Mr. Finlay argued that the Committee intended to lay down an authoritative interpretation of the language of sub-s. 4 of universal application; that treatment, which does not conform to the description there given, cannot rightly be held to fall within the subsection; and that the Committee meant to indicate that the acts of treatment must be absolutely unequivocal and not by possibility referable to any other relationship than that of a son. But this argument puts a strained and unnatural construction on the words of the Committee. Their expression "general construction" clearly refers to the propriety of so construing the Act that it may apply to Mahomedans and others as well as Hindus. The rest of the passage is only a statement in abstract form of circumstances which will clearly bring a case within sub-s. 4. In the sequel of the judgment they show that those circumstances exist in the case before them. There is nothing to show that the Committee intended to set up a standard to which all cases must conform, or that they demanded more demonstrative proof for this kind of question than for any other.

Their Lordships hold that, whenever the evidence shows that a daughter's son has been treated by the talukdar in all respects as his own, it is sufficient to bring the case within sub-s. 4; that the question is one of fact, and must be tried and determined by the same methods as other questions of fact; and that it is very difficult, if not impossible, to lay down a test for such a question in terms less wide than those of the Act itself.

Their Lordships do not comment on the evidence in detail, because they think it important to maintain the general rule as to concurrent findings of fact. But as during the discussion their attention has been called to several points in the evidence, they think it right to add that nothing has been brought forward to [1004] induce them to think that the Courts below have taken any wrong view.

As regards the taluk the appeal fails. But Raza was possessed of other property not belonging to his taluk, both moveable and immoveable. Ahmadi claimed the whole; and Umrao now claims that, whatever the decision as to the taluk, the rights of the parties to the non-talukdari property should be dealt with in this appeal. It appears that by her plaint Ahmadi claimed the whole property in block as devolving to her by force of sub-s. 7 of the Oudh Estates Act and by custom; that, being a Shia and a childless widow, she was not entitled to any interest in the immoveables; and that in Court she did not press any claim to the moveables. What interests Umrao may have independently of Ahmadi is a question that has not been argued, because their Lordships are of opinion that the revived appeal is confined to the question raised between Ahmadi and Sajjad with regard to the taluk.

On Ahmadi's death Umrao, being in the line of succession, applied to the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to be allowed to revive and prosecute the appeal. That learned Judge felt difficulty in acceding to her application, but directed the proceedings to be forwarded to the Registrar of the Privy Council as a Supplementary Record. Umrao then applied to Her Majesty in Council for an order of revivor and substitution. Their Lordships also felt difficulty, and in fact the case is peculiar and novel. But it appeared to them that the question of Sajjad's status must be settled, even if it should only affect the past income; that it would be simpler and less expensive to try it by the existing appeal than by a new suit; and that the Oudh Estates Act so far created a unity of interest between the persons in the line of succession as to justify the substitution, at least in such a case as this, of the more remote claimant for the nearer one. The application was not heard ex parte. Mr. Branson appeared for the respondents, and agreed that the substitution of Umrao would be more beneficial to them. The order therefore was made at the wish of both parties. But nothing was said in the petition or at the bar about non-talukdari property. The reasons for the revivor apply only to the taluk; and it would obviously be improper and [1005] dangerous to allow Umrao to use the position she has obtained as the substitute of Ahmadi for the purpose of advancing her personal claims. Whatever claims Umrao has against any part of the estate she must enforce by suit on her own behalf. The present appeal wholly fails, and their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty to dismiss it with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant: Messrs. Young, Jackson and Beard.
For the respondent: The Solicitor, India Office.

PRESENT:

Lords Hobhouse, Ashbourne and Macnaghten and Sir R. Couch.
[On appeal from the High Court at Calcutta.]

IMAMBANDI BEGUM (Plaintiff) v. KAMLESWARI PERSHAD
(Defendant). [18th April and 9th June, 1894.]

Landlord and Tenant—Apportionment of rent—Decree apportioning rent reserved in a mokurari lease, to the land transferred—Lessees setting possession of less land than stated in lease—Right of lessee to abatement of rent.

A decree had determined that lands, leased in mokurari to a lessee, with a fixed rent thereon, were less in extent than they were specified to be in the pottas that comprised them, the lessors not having title to the whole; and the lessee had obtained possession of the less estate. Held that the lessee was entitled to a corresponding abatement of the rent reserved.

The revenue-paying mehul, within which were the lands subject to the mokurari, such lands being shares of mouzas therein, was afterwards sold for arrears under Act XI of 1859. The purchaser at that sale was sued by the mokuraridar, to make good her incumbrance under s. 54 of the Act. The lease was maintained by the decree that followed, but only as to part of the shares specified in the pottas, and the lessee obtained possession of that part only.

In this suit for mesne profits brought by the lessee against the purchaser's heir, who filed a cross suit against her for rent, it was held that, as the lessee had not proved that she, having had possession under the leases, had been dispossessed by the purchaser, there had not been an eviction in the proper sense of the word. But when, in her suit for possession, part only was decreed to her and she was precluded by the result from getting a substantial part, her position was the same as if she had been evicted. She, therefore, had the same equity for an apportionment as if she had been evicted.

On the facts it was rightly found by the first Court that the leases were [1006] not taken with knowledge on the part of the lessee that the title was a doubtful one.

Two consolidated appeals from two decrees (13th July 1891) of the High Court, reversing two decrees (20th May 1889) of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Monghyr.

The appellant, the plaintiff in the first of these suits, was the widow of Nawab Abdul Ali of Patna ; and the defendant, respondent, who had brought the second, or cross suit, was a zamindar and mahajun of Monghyr. The two suits were heard together in the Court of first instance and on appeal. A difference of opinion having arisen on a matter of law between the Judges of the Appellate Courts at the hearing on the 9th June of 1891, that matter was referred under s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code ; and the final judgment of the High Court dismissing the appellant's suit was delivered by PETHERAM, C. J., on the 13th July 1891.

The object of Imambandi's suit brought in May 1888 was to recover mesne profits for three years, from 1885, upon a one anna thirteen gundas share in one set of villages, and upon a one anna eleven gundas share in another set, both sets being mouzas in a revenue-paying mehal named Bisthazari. These shares, with other, and substantially greater, fractional parts of the mehal, had been comprised in pottas executed, one on 1st March, and the other on 6th April, 1866, to Imambandi by two brothers, Tasudduck Hossein and Mahomed Taki, who had inherited the property from their deceased sister, Bahu Begum. Each potta purported to be a permanent lease of one moiety of 6 annas and 12 dams of specified villages. The consideration of the first was expressed to be nazrana of Rs. 4,630, and a fixed annual jama of Rs. 2,912, of which last sum Rs. 2,828 was to be paid for Government revenue and Rs. 84 was to be paid to the lessor. The consideration of the second lease was a nazrana of Rs. 2,911, and a rent of Rs. 2,888, of which Rs. 2,828 were to be paid as revenue, and Rs. 60 to the lessor. The revenue stated was, in fact, the amount for which the entire 6 annas and 12 dams share, as held by Bahu Begum, was liable in the Collectorate records. The Collector separated a portion of Bisthazari, making it a distinct revenue mehal, Rs. 7,271 being its revenue ; and this comprehended the mouzas [1007] subject to the mokurari. This separated mehal, on its revenue having fallen into arrear, was sold by the Collector for default, and was purchased in June 1875 by Ram Pershad, father of Kamaleswari. To establish against Ram Pershad her mokurari leases, as incumbrances to which the share purchased by him was subject, within s. 54 of Act XI of 1859 (the Bengal Revenue Sale Law), Imambandi sued in 1878. Her suit, which ended in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Imambandi Begum v. Kamleswari Pershad (1) resulted in her obtaining little more than a three annas share, which was declared subject to her mokurari, it appearing that the brothers who leased to her had no title to lease more. That judgment gave to Imambandi a one anna share, in addition to those which she obtained by the High Court's decree, and withdrew from the decree a condition which it had imposed that she, as lessee, if she took possession, should pay the full rent reserved by the pottas of 1866. According to that judgment, the question whether the rent so reserved should be paid in full, or should be apportioned to the estate recovered, was not one for decision in that suit. It was one for future determination, if it should become necessary to decide it. Possession under the order that followed was given to this appellant in June or July 1887. When the suit for mesne profits was instituted a decision became necessary.

The defendant, by his written statement, sought to set off, against the claim, Rs. 17,404, which was the aggregate amount for three years of the entire rent of Rs. 5,801 reserved to be paid annually by the two mokurari pottas of the year 1866, under which the plaintiff had set up a title to the six annas and some gundas of Bisthazari. He also filed a cross suit, claiming a decree for payment of rent at the full amount agreed upon in the pottas, viz., the last mentioned sum.

The matter in dispute between the parties to this appeal remained the same that was expressed in one of the issues (framed in the cross suit, to this effect—whether, after the decision in the suit of 1886 had given to Imambandi only about a fourth part of the shares which had been leased to her in 1866, [1008] Kamleswari, as successor to his father, Ram Pershad, was entitled to receive from her the whole rent, or could only claim rent in proportion to the shares decreed to her.

The Subordinate Judge decided that the rents should be apportioned. He found no evidence to support the contention that the plaintiff had taken the leases, knowing that the lessors had only one-fourth of the shares from their sister Bahu Begum. On the contrary he found that she, as the widow of Abdur Rahman, "was considered in documents" as the sole owner of the inheritance; and the two brothers had obtained certificates under Act XXVII of 1860, as her representatives, on her death. It was probable, in his opinion, that the plaintiff was under a mistake of fact as to the amount of property to which she would become entitled by the operation of the lease; and he regarded her as entitled to the relief claimed in respect of the rents. He fixed the rent at Rs. 1,227-12-2. The claim for mesne profits he found to be Rs. 14,693-2-7. His decree was for Rs. 10,126-7-0, with interest, in favour of Imambandi. In the cross suit he awarded a rent of Rs. 1,273.

Kamleswari appealed in both suits. The judgment of PRINSEP, J., who, with BEVERLEY, J., heard the appeals (in that part of it which related to the apportionment of the rent) was as follows:—

"It is contended on behalf of Imambandi, the lessee, that treating Kamleswari Pershad as her lessor, she is entitled to claim relief in respect of the rent which was originally fixed with regard to the property leased, and that inasmuch as the extent of that property, that is to say, the share of the estate held by her lessor, has been declared to be less than he professed to hold, she is entitled to claim a proportionate abatement of rent. The lease declared that a portion of the rent payable by Imambandi was to be paid direct to the Collector in satisfaction of the revenue on the entire share which the lessor professed to hold, the balance, which is a comparatively small sum, being paid to the lessor. The sum to be paid to the Collector represents the revenue due on the entire estate, and is therefore considerably in excess of what would be due from Kamleswari Pershad on the share that he holds, though that share is greater than that covered by Imambandi Begum's mokurari. It is contended on the one hand that the lessee is entitled to proportionate abatement of rent, and, on the other that she must take up the lease as it now stands or throw it up and claim damages, but that she cannot hold the lease and also claim an abatement of rent on the ground that she cannot obtain [1009] possession of the entire property leased. We have been referred to

s. 15 of the Specific Relief Act and to the cases of Maw v. Topham (1) and the Earl of Durham v. Legard (2). I have had much difficulty in dealing with this matter, and especially because the inclination of my own opinion is contrary to that formed by my learned colleague, who would, on these authorities, decide the point against Imambandi Begum. But after the fullest consideration I regret to be unable to agree with him. The essence of the agreement between Imambandi and her lessor in regard to the payment of her rent was that the entire revenue on the estate should be paid by her to the Collector to relieve her lessor's liability, and that the balance should be paid to the lessor himself; and it was understood that the sum total should represent the rent due on the lease of the entire property. No doubt the title to the entire estate was doubtful, and therefore it was doubtful whether a lease of that property could be given; but the rent was fixed on that basis, and that is especially shown from the manner in which the payments were to be made. It is difficult to understand the benefit which the original lessor, if his rights in the property remained reduced to the extent prescribed in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, would have received from such payments to the Collector in excess of his quota of the revenue payable on his share of his estate; and I am inclined to think that the opposition of Kamleswari to any reduction of the rent agreed to by Imambandi is in some measure due to his possessing zemindari interests over properties not covered by the mokurari, although, if the shares of the lessor and lessee remained co-extensive, such excessive payments of revenue would be to the benefit of third parties, and would not benefit the parties to the original lease as contemplated. The intention of those parties is thus made clear. But surely Kamleswari Pershad, who has purchased a larger share and interest in the estate than that covered by the mokurari, but subject to that lease, is not entitled to this relief because he by an accident holds such larger interest in the estate. We have, therefore, in any view of the position of the parties, the fact that the payment by Imambandi of the entire revenue to the Collector by way of assignment was intended for the benefit of the lessor and the lessor alone, that it was so intended by a convenient arrangement to relieve the lessor as proprietor of the entire zemindari from the trouble of paying Government revenue; and we may take it that if the lessor's interest had alone passed to Kamleswari Pershad, he would not desire to enforce the claim now set up to its full extent. He would in all probability assent to the abatement of rent at least to an extent which would not benefit him. This sum practically represents all the abatement asked for, since the balance of the rent payable directly to the lessor is only a small sum. If he held only the share of the lessor, and Imambandi withheld payment of revenue except to the amount of that share, he would not suffer, for the other sharers would be liable, and they could have no claim against Imambandi.

[1010] "The cases cited are both cases of specific performance of sale. The cases before us seems rather one of abatement of rent because the lessor could not give the lessee the entire estate leased, and the lessee asks to have the intention of the parties carried out under which the rent was settled, and this is shown by the mode of payment adopted on that basis. There is no difficulty in settling the amount of the abatement, because the title of the lessor has been clearly defined, and the apportionment is merely one of simple calculation. This seems to me to have been the difficulty felt in the case of Earl of Durham v. Legard (1), and this seems in a great measure to have influenced that decision. As this point too is one of the matters prominently set out in s. 15 of the Specific Relief Act, I am of opinion that the case does not strictly fall within the purview of that law, or indeed within the cases cited, but that it can more properly be regarded as one of abatement of rent.

"On these grounds I am constrained to disagree from the opinion of my learned colleague, but only on this point. The appeal is otherwise dismissed.

"On that point the appeal must be re-heard before a Judge or Judges to be appointed by the Chief Justice."

BEVERLEY, J., was of opinion that Imambandi was not entitled to any abatement of the full rent if she insisted on taking the interest which her lessors had to give. He considered the matter to be one that was within the contemplation of the 15th section of the Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), and found upon the evidence that there was reason to believe that both parties to the agreements were aware that the lessor's title to the entire property of Abdur Rahman was doubtful. He referred to the price, which was low in regard to the value of the estate. In his judgment, there could be little doubt that the plaintiff took the leases with the knowledge that the estate was less than it purported to be in the pottas, and there was the analogy of the law, as stated in the cases cited from Beavan's reports, applied to purchasers who received estates less in area than those for which they had contracted.

PETHERAM, C.J., who, on the point of law referred to him, concurred with BEVERLEY, J., was of opinion that the present case was "much more like a sale with a misdescription of the property sold than a lease of a specified area of land," and that, therefore, Imambandi, if she elected to retain possession of any portion of the property under the leases, must pay the entire rent.

He accordingly allowed Kamleswari's appeals in both suits, [1011] and declared him entitled in the suit in which he was plaintiff to the full amount of the rent reserved by the two leases (i.e., Rs. 5,801-7-6) for the years in respect of which he had sued, and to set off the aggregate of that rent in Imambandi's suit against the amount due to her for mesne profits.

The Attorney-General (Sir Charles Russell, Q.C.), and Mr. R. V. Doyne, for the appellant:—The lessee obtained possession of only a fourth part of the shares which the mokurari leases purported to give, and she should not be held liable to pay the whole rent which had been fixed on a different understanding. The main reason assigned by the majority that had decided to the contrary in the High Court, was an alleged fact, supported for the first time in the judgment of BEVERLEY, J., with whom PETHERAM, C.J., concurred, that Imambandi had known the doubtful nature of the lessors' title to lease, and had taken the risk of getting less than the pottas gave her. Against this, the first Court found there was no evidence of that state of things, which had been correctly described in the judgment of PRINSEP, J., in adverting to the "essence of the agreement." The whole proposition, on behalf of Imambandi, was that she was not liable as lessee for what she had not obtained from the lessors.

According to the English law, where a lessee was evicted from part of the land by title paramount, he would have to pay only a rateable proportion for the remainder. This was the law according to Chief Baron Gilberts' "Treatise on Rents," edition of 1758, p. 147. Of that work Division VI was entitled thus: "What acts of the lessor or the lessee amount to a discharge of the rent and herein of the eviction of the land, the suspense, extinguishment, and apportionment of the rent." In this, one of the propositions was that—"if part of the land that was letten be evicted from the tenant, such eviction is a discharge of the rent in proportion to the value of the land evicted"—citing 10 Coke, 12a, and other authorities. The Chief Justice's judgment referred to the law as between the vendor, who had less to sell than his contract contained, and the purchaser, who obtained less than he had bought. As to this the law was not against the plaintiff's contention, if applicable at all to the case. It was stated in [1012] Hill v. Buckley (1) that the right of the purchaser was to have what the owner could give "with an abatement out of the purchase-money, for so much as the quantity fell short of the representation."

Relief in Equity, where the particular lands on which a rent was charged could not be fixed on, was referred to in White and Tudor's Leading Cases, 6th edition, 449. Reference was made to Hooper v. Smart (2), where vendors of freehold, not having a title to more than half of the property which they had sold to a purchaser, were obliged in a suit by him for specific performance as to that half, to submit to an abatement of the purchase-money; also to Castle v. Wilkinson (3), Barnes v. Wood (4), and Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 11th edition, 364, 372.

Mr. R. B. Finlay, Q. C., and Mr. J. D. Mayne, for the respondent, relied on the knowledge of the lessee as to the doubtful nature of the title. They contended that it had been found by the appellate Court, having been from first to last a material fact, raised by the issue in the cross suit, which issue stated, generally, the subject of inquiry, referring expressly to the question of Imambandi's liability to pay more than rent in proportion to the shares decreed to her, and if so to how much. If she knew the fact as to the title, her liability remained, as she had taken the risk, under the circumstances of this case, which were examined to show that the inference of her having known the above was correct, the appellant could not have obtained an apportionment of rent as against her lessors. And as against this respondent, the purchaser's heir, even if the appellant had had any remedy which she might have enforced against the lessors, no such remedies existed. The appellant had failed to establish a case for equitable relief, and the result at which the majority of the Judges had arrived was correct. The appellant in the result, although she had not obtained possession of a large proportion of the property nominally transferred to her, had received and retained possession of all that she ever had reason to believe was included in the grant.

[1013] Counsel for the appellant were not called upon to reply.

JUDGMENT.

Their Lordships' judgment, on the 9th June following, was delivered by

SIR R. COUCH.—By a lease, dated the 1st of March 1866, made by Tasudduck Hossein Khan, one of the two brothers of Mussummat Fatima Begum, alias Nawab Bahu Begum, deceased, who it is stated in the lease died, leaving a share of 6 annas 12 dams of another share of 15 annas 6 dams of certain mouzas therein named, and a share of 4 annas out of another share of 15 annas 6 dams in other mouzas also named, one half of which devolved on Tasudduck Hossein, and the other half on his brother, Mirza Mahomed Taki Khan, Tasudduck Hossein granted in mokurari (perpetual) lease his half-share, viz., 3 annas 6 dams of the shares of Bahu Begum in the mouzas, with the exception of those which are said to have been sold during her lifetime in execution of a decree, on receipt of Rs. 4,630 as nazrana (premium), and at a fixed annual rent of Rs. 2,912-11-9 (out of which Rs. 2,828-11-9 were to be paid as Government revenue of the mouzas, and Rs. 84 as the lessor's profits), to Syed Jaffer Ali. The lease contained the following passage: "It is required that the said mokurari-holder should remain in possession of the aforesaid shares of the above-named mouzas, and out of the aforesaid fixed amount of rental continue to pay Rs. 2,828-11-9 in the treasury of the Collector of Monghyr, and the remaining Rs. 84, my reserved rent, to me the declarant, instalment by instalment."

On the 6th of April 1866 Mirza Mahomed Taki Khan, the other brother, made a similar lease of his 3 annas 6 dams share on receipt of a nazrana of Rs. 2,911 at an annual rent of Rs. 2,888-11-9, out of which Rs. 2,828-11-9 were to be paid as Collectorate revenue of the mouzas, and Rs. 60 as reserved rent to Mussummat Nazirunnissa. This lease contained a similar passage as to possession and payment of the Government revenue and rent.

On the 13th June 1875 the respondent's father Babu Ram Pershad bought the entire mehal of Bisthazari, of which the leased shares of the mouzas were parts, at an auction sale for arrears of Government revenue, and by the terms of s. 54 of Act XI of 1859, entitled "An Act to improve the law relating to sales of [1014] land for arrears of revenue," he acquired the mehal, subject to all incumbrances, and with only the rights which were possessed by the previous owner or owners. Syed Jaffer Ali and Mussummat Nazirunnissa were servants of the appellant Imambandi Begum and the leases were made to her in their names.

Disputes arose between Imambandi Begum and Ram Pershad, and in 1878 she brought a suit against him and others to establish her rights to the shares in the mouzas comprised in the leases, of part of which shares she said she was absolutely dispossessed, and of the other part that Ram Pershad had denied her mokurari right. The facts of the case were very complicated, the question being what were the shares of Bahu Begum and the other defendants in the mouzas. Judgment was given by the Subordinate Judge on the 15th August 1880. One of the issues settled was whether the grantors of the mokuraris to the plaintiff, or the plaintiff herself, held possession of the disputed shares within twelve years before the institution of the suit, or had been out of possession for upwards of twelve years. The finding of the Subordinate Judge upon this issue was against the plaintiff, and he dismissed the suit. Imambandi appealed to the High Court. One of the Judges of that Court found that within twelve years next before the institution of the suit the plaintiff herself and her lessors were in possession of the disputed property. The other Judge said that Bahu Begum and after her her brothers were certainly in possession as late as April 1866. The first lease is dated the 1st March 1866 and the second lease the 6th April 1866. The suit was commenced on the 28th February 1878, just within the twelve years allowed by the law of limitation.

Their Lordships think that it must be taken as a fact that Imambandi did not enter into possession under the mokuraris. The High Court found that the share of Taki and Tasudduck Hossein, which they derived from Bahu Begum, was at best one quarter of her husband's estate of 6 annas 12 dams, from which 1 anna sold by Bahu Begum should be deducted, leaving 13 dams in respect of some of the villages; that the share was further reduced in respect of some villages by a decree for 7 dams in favour of another person, and there remained a share of $11\frac{1}{4}$ dams in those villages. The Court also said that the [1015] plaintiff having caused a certain number of the villages covered by her leases to be sold on the 30th January 1868 she could not claim to hold them as lessee, and the suit must be dismissed as to them. Then it was said by the Court that if in execution of the decree the plaintiff elected to recover possession of the aforesaid shares, she would be bound to pay annually Rs. 5,801-7-6, the mokurari rent reserved in the mokurari pottas, and the decree was so made.

Imambandi appealed to Her Majesty in Council against this decree. Upon the argument of the appeal before this Committee their Lordships were of opinion that the decree of the High Court should be affirmed with two exceptions, viz., that the 1 anna share should not be deducted from the one-fourth share, and that the condition that Imambandi would be bound to pay the whole of the rent reserved by the mokurari pottas should be omitted from the decree, leaving the liability for rent to be determined thereafter, if it should become necessary, as the question whether the rent should be apportioned or not did not appear to have been raised and ought not to be decided in that suit. The decree of the High Court was accordingly by Her Majesty's Order in Council varied to that effect, and in other respects was affirmed. Ram Pershad having died, his son Kamleswari Pershad was made respondent in his place. Possession of what was decreed was given to Imambandi (between the 18th June and the 13th July 1887).

On the 28th May 1888 Imambandi brought a suit against Kamleswari Pershad in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Monghyr to recover Rs. 14,693-2-7 as mesne profits for three years of the share of which she had been decreed possession, her claim to mesne profits for a longer period being barred by the law of limitation. Kamleswari Pershad in his written statement claimed to set off against the plaintiff's claim the whole rent reserved by the mokurari leases for the three years, his claim to rent beyond that period being also barred. And on the 30th July 1888 he brought a suit against Imambandi in which he claimed payment of the full amount of the rent so reserved. Imambandi by her written statement offered to pay such an amount of the rent reserved as was proportionate [1016] to the share of which she had obtained possession. The suits were heard together, and on the 20th May 1889 the Additional Subordinate Judge gave judgment in them. Upon the issue as to set off he found that Imambandi was entitled to an apportionment of rent, the annual amount of which he fixed at Rs. 1,227-12-2 $\frac{1}{2}$, and deducting that amount for three years with interest from the mesne profits allowed, he gave a decree in favour of Imambandi for Rs. 10,126-7 with interest. In the suit by the respondent he awarded an annual rent of Rs. 1,243-1-10. The difference between that and the amount fixed in the other suit is not explained. Kamleswari Pershad appealed in both suits to the High Court, which gave judgment on the 9th June 1891. On all the points raised except the question of apportionment the two Judges agreed with the lower Court. On that point they differed, the senior Judge being in favour of apportionment and the junior against it. The matter was accordingly referred to the Chief Justice to be decided according to s. 575 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Chief Justice agreed with the junior Judge. Imambandi's suit was dismissed with costs, and in the suit of Kamleswari Pershad it was declared that Imambandi should pay the full sum of Rs. 5,801-7-6 reserved by the leases. The reference under s. 575 being only allowed on a point of law, if two or more Judges differ upon a question of fact the decree appealed against is to be affirmed. Therefore in this case the facts must be taken according to the findings in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

Imambandi has appealed to Her Majesty in Council against the decision of the High Court, and the question to be determined is whether the rents reserved by the mokurari leases should be apportioned. As Imambandi did not prove that she entered into possession under the leases and was then dispossessed, there was not an eviction in the proper sense of the word. But when Imambandi was obliged to bring a suit to obtain possession, and succeeded in obtaining only a part of what was granted in mokurari, and was precluded by the result of the suit from having possession of a substantial and the larger part, she was in a similar position to having been evicted from that part, and there is the same equity for an apportionment as in a case of [1017] eviction. Indeed this was not disputed by the learned counsel for the respondent. It was submitted to their Lordships that Imambandi knew that the lessors were not entitled to the whole of the shares leased, and a paragraph in the respondent's written statement in the first suit was referred to. In that he said that though the extent of the share in the leases was ostensibly 6 annas 12 dams the rent was fixed in consideration of a one-fourth share. No such question as this was raised by the issue in either of the suits, nor apparently was any evidence offered upon it. The Subordinate Judge says in his judgment: "It is contended by Kamleswari that the plaintiff took the mokurari knowing that the lessors, i.e., the two brothers of Bahu Begum, had only a one-fourth share in the disputed properties; but that assertion is not supported by any evidence. On the other hand, we find that Bahu Begum, the wife of Abdur Rahman, was considered in documents the sole owner of the properties; and after the death of Bahu Begum, her two brothers obtained two certificates . . . for collecting her debts under Act XXVII of 1860. . . . Therefore it is probable that the plaintiff was under a mistake of fact regarding the right of Bahu Begum." This is in the part of the judgment upon the issue whether the defendant was entitled to any and what set-off. Their Lordships do not regard the question of the lessors' knowledge as being put in issue by the question of the amount of the set-off. If it was, there is a finding upon it which stands affirmed by the High Court. But they think that no issue upon that question having been tried by the Subordinate Judge, it ought not to be allowed to be raised in this appeal. In the grounds of appeal to the High Court in the respondent's suit it is said that the Court below ought to have held that the mokurari leases were of a speculative character, and that Imambandi was fully aware at the time of the execution thereof that her lessor's title was under litigation. It might possibly be an answer to the claim for apportionment of the rents that the leases were taken as a speculation, and that Imambandi intended to take the risk of the result of the litigation, but such a case would require to be very clearly proved, and upon the evidence before the Subordinate Judge it would have been plainly wrong to have found that the [1018] leases were speculative. Their Lordships are of opinion that the rent was rightly apportioned by his decree, and that the appeals to the High Court ought to have been dismissed. They will humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the decrees of the High Court and to order the appeals to it to be dismissed with costs, the decrees of the Subordinate Court being thus affirmed. The respondent will pay the costs of these appeals.

INSOLVENCY.

Before Mr. Justice Sale.

IN THE MATTER OF DE MOMET. [25th June, 1894.]

Insolvent Act (11 and 12 Vict., c. 21) s. 60—Trader—Indigo Planter—Statute 12 and 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 65—Workmanship of goods or commodities.

An indigo planter is a "trader" within the meaning of s. 60 of the Insolvent Act.

THIS was an application by the insolvent for his final discharge under s. 60 of the Insolvent Act.

The insolvent had for some years prior and down to the commencement of 1893 carried on the business of an Indigo planter at the Busharutpore Indigo Concern in the North-West Provinces. His schedule showed the name of only one creditor, a Mr. Legge, who was his partner in the Indigo planting business, the partner in fact whose name appeared in the business, and to whom he was indebted to the amount of about Rs. 75,000, a debt incurred in 1870, whilst he was an indigo planter in partnership with Mr. Legge. The original debt was Rs. 60,000, but it had increased by the accumulation of interest. The insolvent had already obtained his personal discharge. The case, so far as it dealt with the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain his petition, as he had only a temporary residence in Calcutta, is reported in I.L.R., 21 Cal., 634. The only point now material was whether the insolvent [1019] was, or was not, at the time he incurred the debt, a trader under s. 60 of the Insolvent Act.

Mr. Dunne in support of the application referred to the case of In re King decided by Trevelyan, J. In that case the insolvent was an indigo planter, and he had obtained his final discharge under s. 60. He submitted that an indigo planter was a trader within the meaning of that section, and that this case was similar to the case cited, which should be followed. Reference was made to 12 and 13 Vict., c. 106, s. 65, and the definition of "trader" there given.

Mr. T. A. Apcar, contra.—The question was not actually raised and decided in the case of In re King. That case was distinguishable, for there the insolvent was described as an indigo planter and "dealer in indigo." This was not a trading debt, but a debt merely owing to his partner in the indigo factory, in respect of the insolvent's share in the partnership. He submitted that an indigo planter did not come within the definition of "trader" in the Act.

The cases under the English Bankruptcy Acts, as to who were considered or not considered traders, were referred to as being in point. A farmer is not a trader under those Acts. To carry on the "trade of merchandise" there must be buying and selling, Sutton v. Weeley (1). The lessee of a coal mine who prepared the produce of the mine for market was held not to be a trader, Port v. Turtan (2); nor the owner of a stone quarry, Ex parte Gardner (3); nor the lessee of an iron mine, Ex parte Salkeld (4), Crawshay v. Collins (5); nor a brickmaker, Ex parte Burgess (6), Heane v. Rogers (7). Reference was made to Shelford on Bankruptcy, 3rd Ed., pp. 123, 124.

Mr. Dunne in reply.—An indigo planter is not a farmer or an agriculturist, but he deals in indigo, and is a trader within the meaning of s. 60. This was the basis of the decision in In re King.

ORDER.

[1020] SALE, J.—In this case I think I ought to follow the course adopted in the case of In re King, who was described as "carrying on the trade and business of an indigo factory proprietor and dealer in indigo, lately residing at No. 3, Chowringhee Lane, in the town of Calcutta, but now residing at No. 21, Lindsay Street, in Calcutta, a European British subject." In that matter the insolvent obtained his personal discharge, and in due course applied under s. 60 of the Indian Insolvent Act, first, for an order nisi, and, then, for an order absolute, for his final discharge. There being no opposition, the discharge was granted. The question whether he had properly described himself as a trader was not raised nor considered in that case. What constitutes a trader depends upon the definition given to that term in s. 65, of the Statute 12 and 13 Victoria, cap. 106, which is rendered applicable to this country by s. 9 of the Indian Insolvent Act. In the enumeration of traders given in s. 65 of that Act are "persons using the trade of merchandise * * * * * or who seek their living by buying and selling, * * * * * or by the workmanship of goods or commodities." Now it was contended that following the profession of the proprietor of an indigo factory constitutes a person a trader within the words "persons using the trade of merchandise, or who seek their living by the workmanship of goods or commodities." It is said that the proprietor of an indigo factory in the ordinary course of his business produces a commodity—namely, indigo—for the purpose of selling it as such, and that he uses the trade of merchandise inasmuch as in the ordinary course of his trade or business he purchases the indigo plant, and then by the ordinary process well known in the indigo industry produces the commodity, indigo, by the sale of which he obtains a profit in his business. It is clear from some of the authorities which have been cited that a manufacturer who purchases the raw material, and then, by a process applied to such raw material, produces a finished article, is a trader; and I think that the case cited shows clearly that a person who merely produces an article from the soil, as for instance the owner of a stone quarry, is not a trader within the words of the section, because there is not that buying and selling necessary to constitute him a trader ; and also because the [1021] articles which he produces and sells is not produced by "the workmanship of goods or commodities" as contemplated by the Act. I think therefore that the case of persons who deal in the natural products of the soil is distinguishable from the present case. It was also said that if the proprietor of an indigo factory be deemed to be a trader within the meaning of the section, so also must the proprietor of a tea garden, whose business it is to manufacture and sell tea. I am not required to decide whether the proprietors of tea estates do or do not come within the class of traders. When the case arises it is quite possible that it may be held that the produce of a tea garden—dried tea leaves—fulfil the description of articles produced "by the workmanship of goods or commodities" within the meaning of 12 and 13 Victoria, cap. 106, s. 65, and that therefore such persons would be traders within the meaning of that Act. But whether or not dried tea leaves may or may not be deemed to be the production of "the workmanship of goods or commodities," the article indigo certainly is.

I think, therefore, I ought to hold that the insolvent, at the time he incurred the debt, the subject-matter of this insolvency, was a trader within the meaning of s. 60 of the Indian Insolvent Act. And I think also that it makes no difference that the business was conducted in the name not of the insolvent but of his partner Mr. Legge. The debt was a trade debt, and the mere fact that it was due to the partner makes no difference. The insolvent will therefore obtain a certificate in the usual form. The costs of the insolvent and of the opposing creditor will be paid out of the estate.

Act I of 1869 (Oudh Estates).

(1) Ss. 8, 10, 22 (11)—Taluk descending to a single heir—Ascertainment of that single heir distinguished from the rule of primogeniture—Family custom.—An estate belonging to a talukdar whose name is entered in the second and not in the third of the lists of talukdars in the six specified classes prepared under the Oudh Estates Act I of 1869, ss. 8—10, is one which according to the custom of the family descends to a single heir, but not necessarily by the rule of primogeniture. If, as happened in the present case, where the estate descended to a single heir, the heir according to lineal primogeniture is more remote in degree from the ancestor than other persons, who may be collaterals, coming within the line of heirship, then, according to the classification in the Oudh Estates Act, nearness in degree prevails over directness of line. But if two collaterals, or other persons in the line of heirship, are equal in degree, then the person rightly entitled is indicated by the seniority of the line to which he belongs. S. 22, sub-s. 11 of the Act, referring to the law which would govern descent in default of any heirs who would come under the special provisions of the Act, includes in that law family custom when established. In an attempt to prove a family custom to the effect that females should not inherit, no proof was afforded by the production of certain wajib-ul-araz, as to which there was nothing to show that the villages of which they were recorded were the villages in suit, or belonging to the family which was disputing the succession. *BHAI NARINDAR BAHADUR SINGH v. (2) S. 22, sub-ss. 4 and 7—Taluk inherited by a daughter's son—Revivor of an appeal which had abated.—The taluk to which the succession was in dispute was one of those entered in the first and second of the lists prepared in conformity with s. 8 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, descending to a single heir by primogeniture. The last talukdar died without leaving a son, but left a widow, and by a former wife two daughters, of whom the elder had a son. The widow's claim to an estate for life, under sub-s. 17 of s. 22 of the above Act, was met by the defence that the daughter's son, having been treated by his maternal grandfather in all respects as his own son, was, under sub-s. 4, entitled to inherit the taluk. The Courts below decided in his favour. Held, that the Courts below were right as to the treatment of the daughter's son in regard to sub-s. 4; 3 C. 626=4 I.A. 228 did not show that sub-s. 4 had been construed to require evidence on that point attaining to any special degree. Leave to revive the widow's appeal, which abated on her death before the hearing, was obtained by the younger daughter of the deceased talukdar, one of the defendants; she being next among those who would have a claim to inherit the taluk in succession should the appeal be decreed. Held, that the appellant by revivor must be restricted to the suit for the taluk, and could not advance on this appeal any claim of her own which she might have preferred in a suit to inherit property which had belonged to the deceased other than the talukdari estate. *UMRAO BEGUM v. The executors appointed by the will took out probate on the 17th March 1891 and on the 14th August 1893 executed a deed, by which they purported, under s. 31 of the Administrator-General's Act II of 1874, to transfer all estates, effects, and interests vested in them to the Administrator-General of Bengal. Held, by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ., affirming the decision of SALE, J. (PETHERAM, C.J., dissenting) that the transfer was not a valid one. The executor of a Hindu testator has no power to transfer the property of the testator to the Administrator-General under the terms of s. 31 of Act II of 1874. That section applies only to the executors and administrators of persons of the class mentioned in s. 16 of the Act, that is to say, persons not being Hindus, Mahomedans, or Buddhist. Per PETHERAM, C.J., contra—The transfer was a valid one. Even if s. 5 of the Hindu Wills Act XXI of 1870 were sufficient to prevent such transfer to the Administrator-General under s. 30 of the Administrator-General's Act of 1867, which is by no means certain, a Hindu executor has power, if not since the passing of the Hindu Wills Act, at any rate since the coming into force of the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), to transfer his interest and estate under a will to the Administrator-General, as constituted under Act II of 1874. The law does not require a licensee always to have his license with him. If under such circumstances on being required to produce it, he is prepared to do so on a reasonable opportunity being given him to get it, and it exists, he should not be prosecuted; if prosecuted, the production of the license at the trial is a sufficient answer, to the charge of infringing the Arms Act. Held, further that a license granted to a person to carry arms and including a retainer authorizes any retainer to carry the arms specified with the permission of his master, and does not restrict him merely to carry them while in the actual presence of his master. *THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. - the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, includes road cess payable by the landlord. A tenure-holder granted a usufructuary mortgage of certain lands within his tenure to A, and directed the tenants to pay their rents to him. Subsequently the superior landlord brought a suit for road cess against the tenure-holder, and in execution of his decree sold the tenure under s. 65 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. A then brought a suit against one of the tenants for arrears of rent, and contended that all that passed under the auction sale was the right, title and interest of the tenure-holder, and that his rights under the mortgage were unaffected by the sale, and that he was still entitled to the rent; Held, that Chap. XIV of the Bengal Tenancy Act must be read with s. 65 of the Act, and that, having regard to the definition in cl. 5 of s. 3, "rent," as used in that section, includes road cess payable by the tenant, and that the sale was a sale of the tenure the purchaser acquiring the property free from the incumbrance created by the tenure-holder in favour of A, it not being a registered and notified incumbrance within the meaning of s. 161 of the Act. NOBIN CHAND NUSKAR v. - (7) S. 22, cl. 2—Transfer of occupancy right and purchase by some of several co-sharer landlords—Merger—Right of other co-sharer landlords to rent.—The acquisition of an occupancy right by a proprietor does not, under sub-s. The "third person" mentioned in that sub-section includes every person interested other than the transferor and transferee. SITANATH PANDA v. PELARAM TRIPATI, 21 C. 869 ... 1211

The mere fact that on a measurement made by a zemindar under the authority of Government, given under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act it is found that the tenants generally are in possession of lands in excess of the areas entered in his zemindari papers and on their rent receipts, does not necessarily prove that he is entitled to additional rent for the excess areas. Where settlements or holdings are of very old date and lands are let out by areas ascertained without any accurate survey, but as contained within certain recognised boundaries for instance, by reference to other holdings, it is incumbent upon the zemindar seeking enhancement of rent very many years after the original settlement to show that the lands held by the ryots are in excess of the lands originally let to them in consequence of some encroachment or some alluvial increment, or that the settlement was made on the basis of measurement and the rates of rent as applied to the area then determined, while on the fresh measurement made by the same length of measure it has been found that he is entitled to receive additional rent which by carelessness or neglect or some other cause he had hitherto lost. A liberal interpretation should be put upon the word "permanently" in s. 38, sub-s. 1, cl. (a), and the word construed with reference to existing conditions. It cannot be said that a deterioration is not permanent, only because by the application of capital and skill it might be removed. In determining the liability to additional rent, the Settlement Officer is by s. 52, sub-s. 2, cl. (c), bound to consider the length of time during which the tenancy has lasted without dispute as to rent or area. Although only an occupancy ryot can bring a suit under s. 38, the principles laid down in that section ought to be taken into consideration in all proceedings for settlement of rent, whatever be the status of the ryot. *GOURI PATTRA v. (14) Ss. 93, 95, 99—Common manager—Minor co-sharers—Court of Wards.—On the 8th January 1891 one of three co-sharers in an estate applied for the appointment of a common manager but on objection taken by the other co-sharers this application was withdrawn. On the 4th March 1892 the same co-sharer applied to the Court to the effect that "proceedings might be taken under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that the management of the estate might be taken over by the Court of Wards." The other co-sharers and the representative of certain minor co-sharers objected to the appointment of a common manager, but consented to the estate being made over to the Court of Wards. On the 30th March 1892 the District Judge, without satisfying himself as to the necessity of the appointment of a common manager, ordered that the estate should be made over to the Court of Wards. The Court of Wards took over the estate, but subsequently refused to act, and the Board of Revenue directed that the estate should be released. On the 13th August 1892 the District Judge issued notices on the co-sharers under s. 93, calling on them to show cause why a common manager should not be appointed. All the co-sharers appeared and objected to the appointment of a common manager, but one of them and the representative of the minor co-sharers stated that they had agreed to appoint a private person manager of their shares. The District Judge therefore appointed such person temporarily as a common manager of the entire estate until the co-owners should take steps under s. 99 to satisfy the Court that they were in a position to manage the estate, and on the 24th March 1893 passed two orders on separate applications made by two of the co-sharers for the release of the estate, refusing to release it, as he was not satisfied that the management of the estate could be conducted

III, cl. 6—Limitation—Decree in suit for rent—Execution of decree—Final decree—Execution proceedings struck off—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 143, 144 and 148.*—Having regard to ss. 143, 144 and 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, there is a special procedure laid down for rent suits, and therefore decrees in rent suits are decrees under art. 6 of sch. III of that Act. The words "final decree" in art. 6, sch. III, of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refer to the final decree in the suit, and cannot be held to include an order of an appellate Court made in an application to set aside that decree—under s. 108 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An ex-parte rent decree having been obtained on the 30th May 1888 for a sum under Rs. 500, the decree-holder on the 27th May 1889 applied for execution thereof and attached certain properties of the judgment-debtor, the date fixed for the sale being the 31st August 1889. The judgment-debtor applied under s. 108 of the Civ. Pro. Code for a re-hearing of the rent suit, and on the day fixed for the sale applied for stay of execution: the sale was stayed, and the Court of its own motion and for its own convenience directed the execution case to be struck off the file "for the present." On the 28th December 1889 the Court passed an order refusing a rehearing of the suit, which order was upheld on appeal on the 16th May 1890. On the 21st January 1892 the decree-holder again applied for execution at the same time praying that his application might be taken to be in continuation of his former application of the 27th May 1889. Held, that the application was one in continuation of the former proceedings in execution, so far at least as regarded the property mentioned in the former application, but as regards other properties it must be held to be barred as not having been made within three years from the decree of the 30th May 1888. BAIKANTA NATH MITTRA v. In the certificate of unpaid demand, the names of the persons described as debtors were those not of the present proprietor, but of former proprietors, and the copy and notice were addressed to them. Held that even if the certificate and the proceedings following it had been duly authenticated, and intimated to the present proprietor which had not been the case, they could not affect his right of property in the villages, inasmuch as the Act only authorized the attachment and sale of the property of the persons who are described as debtors. It cannot be held to apply to a general authority, verbally given by a Chairman to a Vice-Chairman, to institute prosecutions under the Act, as such power can only, under the body of the section, be delegated by a written order. In a prosecution instituted by a Vice-Chairman for obstructing a drain, where it appeared that the Chairman had some months previously verbally given the Vice-Chairman general authority to institute all such prosecutions under s. 353 of the Act, and it appeared that a conviction had been obtained before a Bench of Magistrates, and that on appeal to the Magistrate the conviction had been upheld, the Magistrate himself being the Chairman and hearing the appeal with the express consent of the accused, and when it was contended in revision before the High Court that, although there was no written order by the Chairman delegating his powers, it must be taken upon the facts proved and the circumstances of the case that the prosecution had been instituted with the express or implied consent of the Chairman obtained, both previously and subsequently, within the term of the proviso to s. 45, held that the proviso did not apply to the case, that the prosecution had not been properly instituted, and that the conviction and sentence must be set aside. *KHERODA PROSAD PAL v. The same restricted meaning must be placed upon the word "liability" in s. 116, which section has no application to a dispute as to whether a person assessed to a tax does or does not occupy a holding; and a suit brought to set aside an assessment on the ground that the person assessed does not occupy a holding is not therefore barred by the provisions of s. 116. *DWARKA NATH DUTT v. - (6) Ss. 337, 338, 339, and 344—License for a provision market—Market—Order prohibiting use of unlicensed market—Powers of Municipal Commissioners to grant or withhold licenses.—It is entirely within the discretion of the Municipal Commissioners, under the provisions of s. 339 of the Bengal Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884), to grant or refuse a license for a market, and the Courts have no longer any jurisdiction to control such power, however arbitrarily exercised. A landowner on whose land a market had been held for some years previous, and which land lay within the bounds of a municipality, was prosecuted under s. 344 of the Bengal Municipal Act, and convicted and fined for using such market without having obtained a license under s. 338. He alleged that he had applied for a license and that it had not been granted him, and that the neglect to grant it was due to the fact that his market interfered with a new market established by the Municipal Commissioners, and their desire to close his market. It appeared that some time previous to the institution of the prosecution, the Municipal Commissioners at a meeting passed a resolution "that the provisions of s. 337 of the Municipal Act (Bengal Act III of 1884) be extended to this municipality," and it was contended that by this resolution licenses became necessary to sell at any market any of the provisions mentioned in that section, and that selling without such license rendered the accused liable to prosecution and fine under s. 344. It appeared, further that Part X of the Act, which includes s. 337, had been previously extended to the Municipality by an order of the Government of Bengal. Held, that the resolution of the Commissioners was not an order such as is contemplated by s. 337, as it was not sufficiently precise to convey any definite meaning, and purported only to do what the Act II of 1888 (Calcutta Municipal Consolidation, Bengal).

(1) Ss. 2, 252, 256, 257, 265—Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act IV of 1876), ss. 280, 281, 282—Busti land—Urgency—Trespass—Suit for damages.—S. 2, paragraph 5 of Bengal Act II of 1888, the Calcutta Municipal Consolidation Act by which Act the former Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act IV of 1876 is repealed) provides that pending proceedings which may have been commenced under any repealed Act shall be deemed to have been commenced under the new Act; but though commenced before the passing of the new Act they must, to be effectual, be continued under its provisions, and can only be used to enforce rights and powers in existence at the time when it is sought to enforce them. Where therefore before the passing of Act II of 1888, and whilst Act IV of 1876 was in force, the Municipality took measures under the latter Act to cleanse basti land which was in an insanitary state and notwithstanding the passing of Act II of 1888, which provided totally different preliminaries and procedure for the purpose, continued the improvements practically under the Act of 1876, held that even if the proceedings could be considered, under s. 2 of Act II of 1888 to have been commenced under the new Act, the action of the Municipality amounted to trespass for which they were liable in damages to the owner of the land. *CORPORATION OF CALCUTTA v. No appeal therefore lies against an order refusing to make a person opposing probate a party defendant to an application for probate. Where a Hindu died leaving a widow, and also a daughter (who alleged collusion between the widow and one of the executors applying for probate of an alleged will), the daughter was held to have sufficient interest to entitle her to be made a party to the application and to oppose the grant of probate; and the Judge having refused to make her a party, the Court, finding no appeal lay from that order, thought it a proper case for the exercise of its power under s. 622 of the Civ. - (1) Bengal Tenancy Act, Chap. X, ss. 104, cl. 2, 106, 107, 108, cl. 2—Dispute as to entries in record of rights—Question as to status of ryots—Order of Special Judge on appeal from Settlement Officer—Civ. Pro. Code, s. 622.—Under Chap. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act there is to be—(1) a framing of the record of rights, (2) a draft publication for a period of one month during which time objections may be preferred, and (3) a final publication previous to which publication "disputes" as to the correctness of the entries in the record of rights, other than entries of rents settled, are to be heard and decided. Under s. 107 the decisions of the Settlement Officer in all proceedings under the chapter are to have the force of decrees, and under s. 108, cl. 2, an appeal lies to the Special Judge from all decisions of the Settlement Officer; but it is only in cases under s. 106, decided by the Special Judge on appeal from the Settlement Officer, that a second appeal lies to the High Court, and such cases can only relate to disputes regarding the correctness of entries other than the entries of rent settled. Where a decision of the Settlement Officer in a case under s. 104, cl. 2, of the Act dealt with the question of the status of the ryots, and was passed before the record had been framed; and after the record had been framed there was no dispute as to correctness of any entry, except the entries of the rent settled: Held, that the order of the Special Judge on appeal from such decision of the Settlement Officer was not one passed in a case under s. 106, and therefore no second appeal lay from it to the High Court. Held also that the case was not one which required the interference of the High Court under s. 622 of the Civ. No second appeal, therefore, lies from an order of the Special Judge dismissing an appeal on the ground that no appeal lay to him in a case of a boundary dispute which had been tried and decided by a Settlement Officer acting as a Survey Officer under Part V of the Bengal Survey Act (Bengal Act V of 1875). The Court declined to interfere under s. 622 of the Civ. Pro. Code, being of opinion that the Settlement Officer had power under s. 189 (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and r. 1, chap. VI of the Government rules under the Tenancy Act to act as he had done, and that therefore in holding that no appeal lay to him, the Special Judge had not refrained from exercising any jurisdiction which he ought to have exercised. *IRSHAD ALI CHOWDHRY v. - (4) Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 584 and 585—Findings of fact distinguished from inferences or conclusions of law—Inference of law which the facts found were insufficient to justify.—It is well settled that a Court of second appeal, for the purpose of considering the weight of the evidence is not competent, according to ss. 584 and 585 of the Civ. Pro. Code, to entertain a question as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below. The first Court's decision as to the effect of the evidence must stand final as to the facts. But the soundness of conclusions may involve matter of law and may be questioned by a Court of second appeal. A conclusion was drawn by an appellate Court affirming the judgment of the first Court, that the defendant had accepted as a binding obligation upon him a mortgage executed by his mother, with whom he was a sharer by inheritance on the property charged. A higher appellate Court on a second appeal decided that these conclusions were not warranted by the facts found, and reversed that judgment. Held, that the third Court had not exceeded its powers under the above sections by reversing the decision of the Court below. The expression "specified law" used in cl. (a) of s. 584, first introduced into the Code by the Act of 1877, means "specified in the memorandum or grounds of appeal." *RAMGOPAL v. A judgment-debtor applied to have a sale in execution of a decree set aside on the ground that the sale proclamation had not been duly published, and that it referred to only 5 bighas instead of some 700, the actual amount, and that in consequence thereof a grossly inadequate price had been obtained for the property. The Munsif found these allegations to be proved and set aside the sale. On appeal the District Judge, while agreeing with the Munsif as to these findings, held that there was no proof that the inadequacy of price was due to irregularities alleged and proved, and that such could not be presumed. He accordingly reversed the Munsif's order. The judgment-debtor, having appealed to the High Court against the order of the District Judge, and failed in such appeal by reason of no second appeal lying from such order, applied to the High Court under the provisions of s. 622 of the Code to have the order set aside. Held, that the District Judge having full jurisdiction to determine whether the sale was good or bad, it was impossible to say that, in arriving at the decision he did, he either acted without jurisdiction or illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction, and that the High Court could not therefore interfere with the order under that section. *GOPI KOERI v. - (6) Grounds of appeal—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 584.—The Court of first instance accepted as correct a boundary line mapped by an Amin, dividing the estates of the opposite parties. The lower appellate Court, after remanding the suit for a second local investigation and report, determined to disregard the second return, which differed from the first, and affirmed the judgment. Both parties having appealed, the High Court, dissatisfied as to this disregard of the second return, decided to hear the appeal as a regular one, examined the evidence, and revised the judgment of the Court below. Held, that to have dealt with the appeal as a regular appeal was in excess of the Court's jurisdiction; and that it had no power to hear the appeal as a second appeal, there not having been, in the proceedings below, any error or defect, within the meaning of s. 584 of the Civ. Pro. Code, which contained the only grounds of second appeal. LUKHI NARAIN JAGADEB v. JODU NATH DEO, 21 C. 504 (P.C.)=21 I.A. 39=6 Sar. P.C.J. 403

Pro. Code, full power to consider the matter of jurisdiction or to deal with it on the merits, so as to do substantial justice without putting the parties to the expense of a fresh trial. Where a suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court, was tried both in the Munsif's and District Judge's Courts without objection to the jurisdiction, held, on a second appeal to the High Court that s. 646 of the Civ. Pro. Code, must be read with s. 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, so as to modify its full effect in a case wrongly tried by an ordinary Civil Court and taken in appeal to the District Court: both parties having submitted to the jurisdiction, it was not competent to either of them on second appeal to plead the want of jurisdiction, so as to render the proceedings taken in the suit void. *SURESH CHUNDER MAITRA v. Code, notwithstanding that s. 244 bars a separate suit in such a case; that s. 244, whilst it precludes a right of suit, does not enlarge the right of appeal, which is limited strictly by s. 598. *BHAGBUT LALL v. Court to the credit of the plaintiff in a partition suit, for the costs of the suit which had been secured by the deposit with the attorneys of the title deeds of the plaintiff's family dwelling house which formed a portion of the property sold by the Receiver under the decree in the suit. Held on an application by the attorneys for payment to them of such costs, that the lien could not be given effect to in summary proceedings of this nature but should form the subject of a regular suit. Except in such a suit it is not the practice of the Court to make any order for payment of costs between an attorney and his client. MAHOMMED ZOHURUDEEN v. MAHOMMED NOOROODDEEN, 21 C. 85 ...

S preferred a claim to the property on the ground that she was the purchaser of it at an execution sale, and it was released. The plaintiff then brought a suit against S and F's representative for a declaration that the property was the property of his debtor F, and was therefore liable to be sold in execution of his decree. Held, that the suit was not barred by s. 317 of the Civ. Burden of Proof.

(1) Concurrent findings of fact—Evidence as to liability to account—Inferences of fact—Concurrent findings by two Courts below, not influenced by precisely the same considerations upon the same evidence—Privy Council, practice of.—In 1884 a deed of release exonerating an agent from liability to account was executed by his principal, stating that there had been a settlement between them. In 1885 the agent signed an ikrarnama addressed to the principal, stating that there had not been a settlement of accounts, and that he was willing to account from the day of his appointment to date. Subsequently, having resigned his employment, the agent brought a suit to have the latter document set aside, but that suit was dismissed. In a suit brought by the principal, the release of 1884, and its contents, were proved to the satisfaction of both the Courts below, which dismissed the suit on that ground, although the ikrarnama of 1885 appeared to them, in fact, to have been made. Upon the plaintiff's appeal it was contended that the onus was on the defendant to explain his execution of the ikrarnama. Held, that, inasmuch as it had been found by two Courts concurrently that the release of 1884 was valid, and that it necessarily followed from that finding that the document of 1885 so far as it expressed the agent's willingness to account was false, the onus was as much upon the principal to explain his reception of the ikrarnama of 1885, as upon the agent to explain its execution. The question as to the burden of proof had therefore been rendered immaterial by the facts proved. On the materials before them the Courts below had rightly decided in favour of the defendant. It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations: a difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, necessarily leads to one and the same inference. Champerty.

Agreement to share property the subject of suit—Claim for payment for work done and expenses properly incurred.—The English law of champerty is not in force in India. Agreements made by claimants of property in litigation to share it with others on their obtaining decrees in consideration of funds being supplied by the latter for carrying on their suits, are not in themselves opposed to public policy, nor are they necessarily void. But such agreements, when extortionate, are inequitable; and in that case should not receive effect. Although the present suit failed for this last reason, still reasonable compensation, under the claim for general relief for work done and expense properly incurred, could be awarded, as it had been by the appellate Court below. *RAGHUNATH v. the witnesses and weighing the evidence with the assistance which this affords, whereas the Judges of the Appeal Court can only arrive at a decision on the perusal of the evidence. S. 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not warrant an Appeal Court, in a case where there has been misdirection in a charge to a Jury, going into the evidence with a view to decide whether there is sufficient evidence to justify a conviction. Under s. 418 an appeal in a case tried by Jury lies on matters of law only, and the Appeal Court has no power to try the accused on matters of fact. The word "erroneous" in cl. (d) of s. 423 must not be read as "wrong on the facts," but must be read in connection with the words that follow as meaning that the verdict has been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law. Fourteen accused were charged with rioting armed with deadly weapons, and with murder and causing grievous hurt during such riot. The common object alleged by the prosecution was to compel the payment of certain money by one of the persons of the opposite party. Some of the accused who admitted their presence at the scene of the occurrence stated that they had been attacked on account of an allegation being made that one of the opposite party had enticed away another's wife, and that they had merely acted in self-defence. The case was tried before a Jury, and on the close of the case for the prosecution the Sessions Judge, considering that possibly the common object alleged by the prosecution might be considered not to have been proved, amended the charge and added an alternative common object to it, viz., that the object of the assembly was to punish one of the opposite party for enticing away another's wife. There was no evidence on the record to prove the alternative common object, it being based solely on a portion of the statements of some of the accused, and the Sessions Judge put it to the Jury that it was an inference that could possibly be drawn from the evidence, but it was for them to draw that inference or not. The Jury convicted all the accused without specifying which common object they relied on, and were not asked, under s. 303 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, any question for the purpose of ascertaining what their verdict was based on. Held, that the Judge had misdirected the Jury, and that the verdict of the Jury leaving it uncertain what was the common object which actuated the accused, it was bad in law, and that the conviction must be set aside and the case retried. Held, further, that it was unfair to use a part of the statements of some of the accused put forward in their defence as justifying the use of force by them in repelling the attack of the opposite party for the purpose of showing a common object as against them, and that the statements should have been taken in their entirety and could not in any event be used as against the rest of the accused. Held, further, that if the Sessions Judge was of opinion that there were grounds for charging the accused with a common object other than that alleged by the prosecution, his proper course was not to amend the charge but to add a separate count or counts to the charge upon which a separate verdict could be taken. S. 236 of the Code of Criminal Procedure only authorises a charge in the alternative when it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, and not where there may be a doubt as to the facts which constitute one of the elements of the offence. *WAFADAR KHAN v. Chapter VII of the Code relates to the appearance of parties and the consequence of their non-appearance at first hearings, whereas Chap. XIII of which s. 157 forms a part, contains the procedure for the trial of a suit on an adjournment after the first hearing. Where, therefore, a defendant put in an appearance in the Small Cause Court at the first hearing, and the case was adjourned to a later date for hearing, on which date case was heard in his absence and a decree given against him, held, that such a decree was not one made ex parte so as to enable the defendant to obtain the benefit of s. 108 of the Code, but that his only remedy was under s. 37 of Act XV of 1882. *SITAL HARI BANERJEE v. - (25) S. 235—Order absolute for sale, Application for—Execution of decree—Verification of application—Limitation—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 89.—An application for an order absolute for sale of mortgaged property under the provisions of s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, is not an application for execution of a decree and need not therefore be in the form prescribed by s. 235 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A decree was passed in a mortgage suit on the 13th July 1887, by consent, which directed that the amount due was to be paid in ten annual instalments during the years 1295—1304 (1888—1897) in the month of Falgoon (February) each year, and that on default of three successive instalments, the whole amount was to become at once due and payable. The mortgagor having defaulted in payment of the instalments due in the years 1297, 1298 and 1299 (1880, 1891 and 1892) the mortgagee on the 18th February 1893 presented an application to the Court under s. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act for an order absolute for sale. That application was not verified by the mortgagee, and the mortgagor objected that, not being so verified as required by s. 235 of the Code, it could not be granted. On the 9th May 1893 the mortgagee applied for and obtained leave to verify the application which he did on that day. It was urged on behalf of the mortgagor that the application must be treated as made on the 9th May, and therefore not within three years of the date on which the 1297 instalment became due (7th March 1890), and that it was therefore barred by limitation. Held, that the application did not require to be in the form provided by s. 255,

- (26) S. 244—Question in execution of decree—Parties to suit—Alteration of decree by Court executing decree.—The plaintiff purchased a one-gunda share in estate No. 831 and obtained a decree for possession against the defendants. While the plaintiff's suit was pending, and before he took out execution under the said decree, partition proceedings took place. By the partition proceedings the defendants' interest in the estate No. 831 was converted into a smaller estate, No. 2218, in lieu of their share of the whole estate. The plaintiff then brought a separate suit to have it declared that the defendants' interest in estate No. 831 had passed to estate No 2218. Held, that the suit was not barred by s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. The required transformation of the defendants' interest could not be effected without altering the decree which was given in the former suit. The question that arose in the suit, although it was one between the same parties as those in the former suit, could not be regarded as a question relating to the execution of the decree in the former suit, and therefore the Court in execution proceedings had no authority to make the necessary alteration in the decree. *KRISHNA ROY v. - (27) S. 244—Separate suit—Uncertified adjustment—Agreement not to execute decree—Suit by judgment-debtor to stay execution—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 258.—The defendant in January 1887 obtained a decree against the plaintiff, which he partially executed, and thereupon an adjustment of account took place between the plaintiff and defendant, in which a certain sum was found due by the plaintiff to the defendant, for which sum the plaintiff gave a bond to the defendant in consideration of which the defendant agreed to, exonerate the plaintiff from liability for the balance due under the decree. This satisfaction of the decree was not certified to the Court. On 12th March 1890 the defendant applied for further execution of the decree. In a suit for a declaration that the defendant had no right to execute the decree, and for an injunction to restrain him from executing it, it was contended that the suit was barred by s. 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code. Held by PIGOT and MACPHERSON, JJ. (BANERJEE, J., dissenting) that s. 244 is not limited by s. 258, and that the suit was not maintainable. Where a decree is satisfied by an agreement out of Court, and such satisfaction is not certified to the Court, a subsequent suit on the agreement is not maintainable if the object of the suit is to restrain the decree-holder from executing his decree in contravention of the agreement. Per PIGOT, J.—Section 244 of the Civ. Pro. Code does not absolutely bar a suit, but prohibits in a separate suit between the same parties to a decree any relief being granted which interferes with the conduct of the execution proceedings by the Court executing that decree. Per BANERJEE, J.—A suit on the agreement was maintainable. Section 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code having enacted that an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized as an adjustment of the decree by any Court executing the decree implies that it may be recognized as such by a Court trying the matter as a regular suit. *AZIZAN v. - (43) S. 295—Sale in execution of decree—Distribution of sale proceeds—Realization of proceeds of sale—Sale under agreement sanctioned by Court—Sale not of the right or interest of judgment-debtor in property.—P the plaintiff in a suit No. 369 of 1886, obtained a decree for Rs. 2,14,728, in execution of which certain immoveable property was attached, including the premises No. 22, Strand Road, which was subject to certain trusts created by a deed, dated 2nd February 1858, executed by the father of the judgment-debtors, who with one M. were trustees of the deed. At the time of the attachment a suit No. 448 of 1883 was pending, in which the judgment-debtors as plaintiffs sought to have it declared what were the valid trusts under the deed, and that, subject to such trusts, they were absolutely entitled to the premises 22, Strand Road, and the other properties; in that suit on 26th March 1888 a decree was made declaring the valid trusts, and charging the premises 22, Strand Road, with the payment of certain specific sums. In 1891, the judgment-debtors brought a suit No. 441 of 1891 to have the premises 22, Strand Road, sold freed from the trusts, to provide for the trusts by setting apart a sufficient sum out of the purchase-money, and to have the balance divided between the judgment-debtors; and by the decree in that suit, dated 2nd September 1892, the trustees of the deed were authorised to sell the premises 22, Strand Road, and were directed out of the proceeds of sale to set aside Rs. 45,000 to provide for the trusts next to pay the costs therein directed, and then to apply the balance for the purposes in the plaint mentioned. In pursuance of this authority the trustees on 25th February 1893 entered into an agreement with one J. L. for sale to him of the premises 22, Strand Road, for Rs. 1,43,000. On 8th August 1893 a notice was issued at the instance of P. calling on the judgment-debtors to show cause why the premises 22, Strand Road, should not be sold in execution under her attachment. On 29th August 1893 the trustees of the deed of 2nd February 1858 gave notice to P. of an application to be made in the suits Nos. 369 of 1886 and 441 of 1891 for the removal of her attachment or in the alternative for an order that the agreement for sale entered into by the trustees with J. L., be carried out; that the proceeds of sale be applied to certain purposes specified in the notice, as having priority over the claim of P.; that the balance be paid to the credit of suit No. 369, "as subject to the said attachment," and that the premises 22, Strand Road, be thereupon released from attachment. These applications were heard together, and on the 14th September 1893 a consent order was made, by which it was ordered that the trustees be at liberty to carry out the agreement for sale with J. L., that the sale proceeds be paid to W., a member of the firm of the attorneys for P., who out of such proceeds was to pay Rs. 45 000 to the trustees, and make other payments directed by the order and pay the balance into Court to the credit of suits Nos. 369 of 1886 and 441 of 1891, "the said P. retaining her lien under her attachment upon the said balance in the same way as the same then subsisted upon the said property." The property was sold by the trustees in accordance with this order, and the purchase money was paid to W., who after making the payments directed paid the balance into Court. Whilst in the hands of W., the balance was attached by other creditors who had obtained decrees against the judgment-debtors, and it was paid into Court with notice of these attachments: Held, on an application by P. to have the money paid out to her in part satisfaction of her decree, that it could not be treated as "assets realised by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" within the meaning of s. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The sale of the property under the order of 14th September 1893 was not a sale in execution, but a sale in pursuance of a private agreement entered into by the trustees under a liberty reserved to them by the Court, and the fact that the Court sanctioned it made no difference in this respect. It did not purport to be a sale of any right, title or interest of the judgment-debtors or of any property belonging to them. To constitute a "realization" within the meaning of s. 295 there must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code. If the money paid into Court had exceeded the amount due to P. in respect of her lien the amount of such excess might perhaps have been treated as a "realization in execution" within the meaning of s. 295, but the balance in W's hands was less than the amount due to P., and was entirely absorbed by the lien in her favour. There was therefore no surplus on which the attachments could operate. PROSONNOMOYI DASSI v. SREENAUTH ROY, 21 C. 809 ...

- (45) S. 310-A—Act V of 1894, s. 2—Construction of Statute—Act creating new rights, effect of—Execution of decree—Sale in execution of decree held after Act V of 1894 came into operation, the execution proceedings being commenced before—Retrospective enactment when applicable to pending proceedings.—On the 30th January 1894 application was made for execution of a decree passed on the 5th of the same month and certain property was thereafter duly attached. On the 8th February 1894 the sale proclamation was published, and on the 26th March the sale was held. On the 17th April 1894 the judgment-debtor applied to the Court under the provisions of s. 310-A of the Code of Civil Procedure (which section was added to the Code by Act V of 1894, and which came into operation on the 2nd March 1894) to have the sale set aside on payment to the auction-purchaser of 5 per cent. on the purchase money and to the decree-holder of the amount mentioned in the sale proclamation. The auction-purchaser resisted the application on the ground that the section could not affect the sale in question: Held (PETHERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., dissenting) that the section conferred a new and substantive right on the judgment-debtor and was not merely a matter of procedure; and that as Act V of 1894 does not clearly indicate the intention of the Legislature that it was meant to have retrospective effect, the section had no application to pending proceedings, and the judgment-debtor was not entitled to have the sale set aside under its provisions. Held, per PETHERAM, C.J., and O'KINEALY, J., that the section merely dealt with a matter of procedure and applied to the sale which the judgment-debtor was entitled to have set aside. Per PETHERAM, C.J.—All that s. 310-A does so far as the decree-holder and judgment-debtor are concerned, is to extend the period during which the latter may discharge his liability by 30 days beyond the date of the sale, and is merely a modification of the way in which the successful litigant may obtain the fruits of his decree; and even if it be considered as creating a new and substantive right in the judgment-debtor the words used by the Legislature in Act V of 1894 must be taken to have been used with the express intention that the section should have a retrospective effect in the sense that it should take effect on sales held after the Act came into operation, though the execution proceedings, of which the sale was a part had been commenced before the Act came into operation. Per O'KINEALY, J.—Act XIV of 1882 is on the face of it an Act of procedure and nothing more, and what the Legislature intended to do by Act V of 1894 was to amend the rules of that Code with regard to the sale and delivery of property, and the section, both in form and substance, is merely a rule of procedure under which no party has a vested interest. In addition, as under s. 316 of the Code, a purchaser has no vested interest in the property before the date of the certificate, he could not insist on the sale being confirmed and a certificate being given him if the amount due by the judgment-debtor be paid in before that date. "forfeit" as used in s. 35 of the Indian Companies Act and the word "penalty" as used in other sections of the Act, and the omission to duly stamp a share warrant under that section is an offence under the Act punishable by a penalty, to enforce the payment of which a Magistrate has jurisdiction under s. 252. In a case under s. 35 (a) Magistrate has no option but to inflict the full fine of Rs. 500 if the offence be proved. Where a person was charged, as being the principal officer of a company, with having issued nine share warrants not duly stamped, in respect of which the penalties claimed under s. 35 amounted to Rs. 4,500, and where it was contended that the infliction of such a penalty was beyond the jurisdiction of the Magistrate which under the provisions of s. 32 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was limited to inflicting a fine of Rs. 1,000; held, that the issue of each of the nine share warrants was a separate offence, and the fact that several offences had been committed and therefore that the Magistrate's power to fine would extend to more than Rs. 1,000 was not affected by that section of the Code. *QUEEN-EMPRESS v. A police constable arrested a carter and charged him before a Magistrate with an offence under s. 34 of Act V of 1861. The Magistrate acquitted the accused and directed, under s. 560 of the Code, that the police constable should pay him Rs. 20 as compensation, or undergo simple imprisonment for a fortnight: Held, that as the section has no application to the case, the order was illegal, being made without jurisdiction. Held, further, that even if the Magistrate had power under the Code to pass an order for imprisonment in default of payment of compensation awarded under s. 560, it was illegal to pass such an order until some attempt had been made to levy the amount in the manner provided by s. 386 for the levying of a fine. *RAMJEEVAN KOORMI v. offence with which he is charged has been compounded so as to take away the jurisdiction of the Criminal Courts to try it, the onus is on him to show that there was a composition valid in law. M, a European British subject, charged with the compoundable offences of wrongful restraint and wrongful confinement of coolies employed on a tea garden of which he was the manager, pleaded that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the cases, as they had been compounded by the complainants. The alleged compromise consisted in a Bengali paper, signed by the coolies, stating that they "made razinama" (compromise) "of the case of their own accord" and a paper in English signed by M, these papers being given to the District Superintendent of Police, who had investigated the complaints, and who stated that he asked the coolies as to the contents of the Bengali paper, and they said that they had signed it voluntarily and stated its purport, and that one of them said in the presence of the others that it was a razinama. G one of the coolies, also wrote on the paper the words in Uriya "I will not carry on the case." The Bengali paper was written by the darogah of the police station in presence of M. The paper signed by M was as follows:— "I hereby agree with these Ganjam people that there shall be no legal proceedings of any kind taken against them with the exception of those who have not completed their agreements. Those whose agreements have not been completed, proceedings will be taken against them on 22nd May, if they have not returned to the garden before then." Neither of the papers were explained to G so as to make them intelligible to him, for though the Bengali paper was read out, G did not understand that language. G was one of the coolies who had completed his agreement with M. Held per PRINSEP, J.—The compounding of an offence signifies that the person against whom the offence has been committed has received some gratification to act as an inducement for his desiring to abstain from a prosecution; here there was no forbearance on the part of M to proceed against G, who had served out of the term of his engagement, and, therefore, there was no consideration for the agreement to compound. Having regard, moreover, to the ignorance and inferior intelligence of G, it was of vital importance for M to show what led to the alleged agreement, and how it was that the darogah was instrumental to it, which he had not done. Per TREVELYAN, J.—Compounding an offence supposes an arrangement by which the parties have settled their differences, and in the more usual acceptation of the term implies that the prosecutor has received some consideration or gratification for dropping the prosecution. Although the provisions of the Contract Act may not apply, the proof of the arrangement must be similar to that which the Court requires for the proof of any agreement which is in issue; and unless it appears that the parties were free from influence of every kind and were fully aware of their respective rights, it would be impossible to give effect to a so-called arrangement or composition. Having regard to the fact that the writer of the Bengali agreement had not been called, and that the contracting parties were, on the one side ignorant coolies, strangers to the land and to the language in which the document was written, and on the other, a European of some education, assisted by his Bengali clerk, and having also the assistance of the police it was not proved that G knew what he was about and was fairly contracting. Held, therefore, by the Court that there was under the circumstances no compounding of the offences with which M was charged, valid in law such as to deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction to try them. *MURRAY v. (1) Delivery order for goods deliverable monthly — Sub contract — Tender — Repudiation of contract.—The defendant entered into a contract with the Union Mills for the purchase of "90,000 gunny bags at Rs. 21-8 per 100 bags, delivery from October to March, each month 15,000 bags." Subsequently the defendant contracted to sell to the plaintiffs these 90,000 bags "at Rs. 24-2 per 100 bags, delivery from October to March, 15,000 each month, buyers to pay difference cash against delivery order on mills." In August the defendant made out in the plaintiffs' favour a delivery order directing the mills to deliver 90,000 bags on receiving payment for the same at Rs. 21-8 per 100 bags, and on the same day sent to the plaintiffs a bill showing the amount of difference payable to him by them. The plaintiffs refused the delivery order on the ground that it had not been accepted by the mills; but on a subsequent tender of the order and bill, they offered, on the 5th September, to pay the amount of difference on receiving a delivery order accepted by the mills. The defendant treated the contract as at an end and sold the bags in the market. In a suit for damages, held, that the defendant sold not only a delivery order, but the right to obtain from the mills 90,000 bags deliverable in lots of 15,000 per month after payment of the difference; and impliedly undertook that the mills would accept the delivery order and deliver the goods in terms thereof when presented; that the plaintiffs were entitled to get the delivery order at any reasonable time before the first monthly instalment fell due; and, further, that the defendant was not entitled to repudiate the contract after the plaintiffs' offer of the 5th September, and having done so was liable in damages. *RAMDEO v. (2) Sold note—Mistake in name of one of the parties to the contract—Evidence to show with whom the contract was really made—Damages for breach of contract, right of suit for.—A contract intended to have been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant, was entered by a mistake on the part of the broker, in the sold note, as having been made between a third person and the defendant. In a suit brought by the plaintiff on the contract, oral evidence was given to show that the contract was really made between the plaintiff and the defendant. The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that the mistake did not mislead the defendant, and gave judgment in favour of the plaintiff contingent on the opinion of High Court as to whether the mistake in the sold note was a bar to the plaintiff's suit for damages on the contract. Held, that there was a contract between the parties for the breach of which the plaintiff could sue for damages. *MAHOMED BHOY PUDDUMSEE v. On no account shall any larger amount be demanded." In a suit instituted when the land had been fully brought under cultivation, and after measurement, the plaintiff claimed only her own share of the rent and her co-sharers did not join her as co-plaintiffs, nor were they made defendants. Held, that the suit was not maintainable. What the lease contemplated under the circumstances which had arisen was a final adjustment of the rent, and such an adjustment could be obtained only by a suit brought by all the co-sharers or by some of them if the others refused to join, but in that case the suit must be for the adjustment of the entire rent, and all the necessary parties must be properly before the Court. *BINDU BASHINI DASI v. In 1886 K. S. mortgaged his undivided share to S.C. in consideration of a loan advanced by S.C. to him. In 1887 K.S. brought a suit, to which S.C. was not made a party, against K.B. for partition, and on the 27th April 1888 obtained a decree under which a commission of partition was issued. In the course of the suit both K.S. and K.B. died, K.B. on 2nd September 1888, and K.S. on 30th March 1892, and by orders of Court their sons were put on the record in place of their respective fathers. The return to the commission of partition was made on 24th February 1892, and on 20th July 1893 an order was made confirming the return, and, under s. 222 of the Civ. Pro. Code, charging the costs of suit and of the commission of partition to the shares of the plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, in the suit. Meanwhile in July 1889 S.C. brought a suit on his mortgage and obtained a decree, dated 5th August 1889, for an account and sale, and in that suit a final order for sale was made on 5th January 1891, which however was only filed on 19th August 1893. Under that order the property was advertised for sale, the return to the commission of partition being set out in the abstract of title as part of the title, and the property to be sold being described as a divided moiety. In an application made both in the partition and mortgage suits, by the defendants in the partition suit, for an order for sale of a portion of their share of the property in order to pay the costs of the suit and of the partition and other debts and liabilities for which they were liable. Held, that the mortgagee, having had the benefit of the partition, and having accepted and approved of it as part of his title, as shown by the proceedings for sale, was, though not a party to the partition suit, bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition. He was therefore liable in respect of a proportionate share of the charge for costs of the partition created by the order of Court made in that suit under s. 222 of the Civ. Pro. Code, and such proportionate share of those costs should be deducted in priority out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property. The defendants in the partition suit, however, not being parties to the mortgage suit, such an order could not be properly made at their instance, but they should enforce the charge for costs against the mortgagee by supplemental suit, and the Court stayed the sale of the property for a reasonable time to give the parties an opportunity of moving for stay of the sale in any such suit as might be instituted. *KHETTERPAL SRITIRUTNO v. The defendants admitted that three of the properties were ancestral and joint, but as to the other items the 2nd defendant stated that they were the self-acquired property of her deceased husband, and contended that the plaint was insufficiently stamped, as the object of the suit was to obtain a declaration of title to and possession of properties in which the plaintiff had no interest. An issue was raised on this point and on this issue the Subordinate Judge allowed the objection and rejected the plaint. On appeal, held by PETHERAM, C.J., and NORRIS, J., that the plaint was sufficiently stamped. The only relief prayed for was partition, and for the purposes of the stamp the cause of action which is stated in the plaint, and that only, must be looked at. The members of the Appeal Bench, however, differed in opinion as regards the question of costs, PETHERAM, C.J., being of opinion that the costs of the appeal should be treated in the same way as the rest of the costs in the case, and be divided between the parties to the partition; and NORRIS, J., holding that the respondent having failed on appeal ought to pay the costs; and on this question an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent, cl. 15. Held by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ.—The costs of the appeals were severable from the general costs of the suit and therefore, though the suit was one for partition, the principle that the unsuccessful party must pay the costs was applicable so far as the appeals were concerned; the respondent therefore should pay all the costs in the two appeals. Held by PIGOT, J.—The respondent should pay in any event her own costs of the preliminary issue and of the appeal, but that, as to the plaintiff's costs of that issue and of the appeal they should be in the discretion of the Court as between the parties to this appeal, such costs being in no case to form part of the costs of the partition. *MOHENDRO CHANDRA GANGULI v. He married a lady of Solingen in Rhenish Prussia, where the Code Napoleon is in force. There, in contemplation of the marriage the parties entered into a contract whereby it was provided that "there should be, and rule, universal community of his and her present and future moveable and immoveable property," which contract placed the parties under the law of France respecting community of property between husband and wife. Under that law a husband and wife have an equal interest in the property comprised in the community; on the death of either the property is divided into two parts of which one part goes to the survivor and the other to the heirs or to donees under a testamentary disposition. Held, that on the death of F only one-half of the property was chargeable with the ad valorem duty payable under art. 11 of sch. 1 of the Court Fees Act the other half being trust property, which should, under the provisions of s. 19-D. of that Act, be exempted from payment of such duty. In the Goods of FROESCHMAN, 20 C. 575 ...

Pro. Code, gave such information as to the commission of a murder, in consequence of which a police officer arrived in the village shortly after the occurrence, held, that the fact that other persons who might possibly also be bound to give that information had omitted to do so was no ground for their prosecution and conviction of an offence under s. 176 of the Penal Code. *THE QUEEN-EMPRESS v. - (7) S. 145—Breach of the peace—Police report—Duties of Magistrate acting under s. 145—Record of grounds—Notice to parties.—Before instituting proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a Magistrate is bound to satisfy himself, on grounds which are reasonable, that a breach of the peace is imminent in regard to properties of the description specified in that section and that a dispute likely to cause a breach of a peace exists concerning them; and the grounds stated by him must be such as to satisfy a Court of Revision before which such case may be brought by any of the parties concerned. Where a Magistrate, in consequence of the institution of various cases relating to breaches of the peace between the partizans of two rival zemindars, had directed the police to enquire and report whether there were sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, Crim. Pro. Code, and, having received a report which both suggested the necessity for such proceedings and set forth substantial reasons in support of the suggestion, made such report the foundation for the proceedings which he instituted, it was contended, among other things, that the Magistrate had not complied with the provisions of the Code in omitting to state the grounds of his being so satisfied of the imminence of a breach of the peace. Held, that inasmuch as the police report contained abundant evidence of the likelihood of a breach of the peace, it was sufficient, for the purpose of notice to the parties, for the Magistrate to cite it as the ground of his proceeding on which he was satisfied that a dispute, within the terms of s. 145 existed, and that it would be open to the parties during the proceedings, if they disputed the necessity for them, to show before the Magistrate, that no such dispute existed, or, if so advised, to move the Court of Revision to set aside the proceedings, on the ground that the Magistrate had proceeded on grounds which were not reasonable or which could not be held to be sufficient to satisfy him that such a dispute existed. *DHANPUT SINGH v. - (8) S. 145—Breach of the peace—Record of grounds for Magistrate taking proceedings under s. 145—Notice to parties—Sessions Judge not empowered to order proceedings under s. 145—Parties claiming to be in possession of land, subject of dispute, rights of, to appear in proceedings.—To justify the initiation of proceedings under s. 145, Crim. Pro. Code, it is not sufficient that, in the course of a trial it should appear from the statement of a witness examined that a breach of the peace is likely to ensue in consequence of a dispute regarding land. Before taking action, the Magistrate is bound to be satisfied from a police report or other information on this point, and he is also bound to make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied, and this must be served on the parties to the dispute, for it is the intention of the law, not only that Magistrates should have sufficient grounds for proceeding under s. 145, but that they should inform the parties concerned of the grounds on which they are proceeding. A Sessions Judge is not competent to order a Magistrate to take action under s. 145. He should rather draw his attention to the nature of the dispute in the trial before him, so that the Magistrate may exercise his own discretion as to the necessity of proceedings. Proceedings so initiated, when there is nothing in the police report or elsewhere to justify them, would be void, and s. 537, Crim. Pro. Code,

- would have no application. Parties who, though not actually involved in the dispute, claim to be in possession of lands which are the subject of proceedings under s. 145, should not be shut out from giving evidence in support of their claims. To do so would undoubtedly occasion very serious prejudice and interference with any possession which they might be able to establish. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. GOBIND CHANDRA DAS, 20 C. 520 ... 352
- (9) S. 145—Striking off proceedings under s. 145—Code of Criminal Procedure, effect of—Breach of the peace—New proceeding.—Proceedings under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure cannot be renewed after the dispute has been settled and an order has been made that the case be struck off. - (12) S. 147—Disputes concerning easement—Procedure to be observed by Magistrate when dispute exists regarding an easement—Parties entitled to notice.—The enquiry contemplated under s. 147 of the Code of Criminal Procedure is a judicial enquiry, and the opinion formed by a Magistrate must be a judicial one based on evidence legally recorded by him in the manner provided by s. 356, and on due notice to the persons who respectively claim or deny the right, the subject of the dispute. Notice to servants of such persons is not equivalent to notice to them, and in such cases actual notice should be given to all the persons claiming or denying the right and interested in the subject-matter of the enquiry. Magistrates should not institute proceedings under s. 147, unless they are satisfied that a real danger of the evil, for the prevention of which the procedure was devised, does in fact exist. Such enquiries may lead to injustice being done from defective procedure and a Magistrate would be wise not to use the section in cases where it must involve a long and complicated enquiry and the presence of a large number of people when the remedy of binding down a few persons to keep the peace is ready to his hand. *BATHOO LAL v. The Deputy Magistrate convicted the accused of an offence under s. 498 of the Penal Code, and sentenced him to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Judge being of opinion that the Deputy Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict the accused under s. 498, there being no complaint by the husband under s. 199 of the Crim. Pro. Code, and that the offence did not fall under s. 238 of the Crim. Pro. Code, referred the case to the High Court. Held, that such a case is within the intention of s. 238. The intention of the law is to prevent Magistrates enquiring of their own motion into cases connected with marriage unless the husband or other person authorized moves them to do so. But when the husband is complainant and brings his complaint under s. 366, a conviction under

Had Manipuri statement not been made the Magistrate, by recording the statement in English, would not have strictly complied with the spirit and intention of s. 364 of the Crim. Pro. (1) Irregularity in — Irregularity prejudicing the accused — Rioting, counter-charges of—Cross cases tried together—Evidence in one case considered in the other—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 233, 239, 309, 342, 344, 537—Illegality—Fight between two parties not "transaction."—Where two cross cases of rioting and grievous hurt were committed separately for trial before a Sessions Judge, who having heard the evidence in the first case, heard the evidence in the second case, examined some of the accused in the one case as witnesses for the prosecution in the other and vice versa, and subsequently heard the arguments in both the cases together, and the opinions of the assessors (who were the same in both the cases) were taken at one time, and both the cases were dealt with in one judgment: Held, that this mode of trial although irregular, did not prejudice the accused in their defence, and that under such circumstances a re-trial was not made necessary by reason of such irregularity. Nor did the examination of the accused who were on their trial in one case as witnesses for the prosecution in the other affect the validity of their conviction. Semble.—A fight between two parties cannot be treated as a 'transaction' within the meaning of s. 239 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On the law as contained in that section, the two parties cannot regularly be charged in the same trial. QUEEN-EMPRESS v. CHANDRA BHUIYA, 20 C. 537 ...

(2) Irregularity—Magistrate passing sentence before finishing his judgment—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 265, 367 and 537.—A Magistrate on a charge of rioting passed sentence on the accused without delivering his judgment in open Court, the judgment (one in course of being written during the hearing of the case) being in fact not then completed. The case went on appeal to the Sessions Judge, who, dealing fully with the evidence taken before the Magistrate, confirmed the conviction and sentence. Held per PRINSEP AND TREVELYAN, JJ., that the judgment of the Magistrate was not one in accordance with the law as laid down in s. 366 of the Crim. Pro. Code: but held by PRINSEP AND O'KINEALY, JJ., (TREVELYAN, J., dissenting) that the irregularity was one contemplated by s. 537 of the Code and not having occasioned any failure of justice, it did not necessitate a re-trial of the case. Per TREVELYAN, J.—The case was more than one of mere "error, omission or irregularity" within the meaning of s. 537; the judgment having been irregularly arrived at and pronounced, there was no "judgment" in accordance with law, and therefore no fair trial to which every accused person is entitled; the case ought therefore to be re-tried. *DAMU SENAPATI v. The former can obtain a declaratory decree, and an injunction restraining the wrong-doer. In such a suit the defence was that the land was wakf, and the defendant mutwali of it. Both Courts found that the plaintiff was in possession as purchaser from some of those who were entitled to sell. But the first Court did not find a fact, which the appellate Court found, viz., that the property had been constituted wakf. Both Courts, however, concurred, in the finding that the defendant at all events was not the mutwali, and had no title. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaratory decree against this defendant as to his right, and an injunction restraining him from interfering with his possession. For the purposes of the plaintiff's claiming such a decree, it was not necessary that he should negative the wakf, as to the validity of the endowment no decision being needed. This could not be decided either way in this suit, as parties interested were not before the Court. ISMAIL ARIF v. MAHOMED GHOS, 20 C. 834 (P. C.)=20 I.A. 99=6 Sar. P. C. J. 305=17 Ind. Jur. 321 ...

Code, to amend a decree, it being the duty of the Court to amend it whenever it is found to be not in conformity with the judgment. A instituted a suit for declaration of title and for possession. The decree, which was finally confirmed by the High Court, gave her the declaration sought for, but it contained no direction as to the possession, although the judgment stated that she was entitled to possession. A's son (having been substituted in her place) applied to have the decree amended. The lower appellate Court held that the application was barred by limitation. The High Court on appeal upheld the lower Court's order, not on the ground of limitation, but on the ground that the application to amend the decree had been made in the wrong Court. A's son then instituted a fresh suit against the same parties for declaration of title, perpetual injunction and for mesne profits. Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have the decree amended under s. 206, Civ. Pro. Code, and that, though the plaintiff's claim to possession was barred, yet, his right was not extinguished, and he having therefore a subsisting title, was entitled, though out of possession, to maintain the suit so far as it sought to recover mesne profits. D admittedly paid the instalments due from him up to Choitro 1292 (March-April 1885) and a portion of that due in Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886) and K admittedly paid those due from him up to Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886), and although in the application for execution payments made subsequent to these dates were alleged by the decree-holders to have been made, both lower Courts found such payments not to have been proved. On the 1st September 1890, more than three years after the default made by D in Choitro 1293 (March-April 1886) and that made by K in Choitro 1294 (March-1887), the decree-holder, applied for execution of the whole decree with interest after deduction of all instalments alleged by them to have been paid. On second appeal before the High Court it was contended that although the application to execute the entire decree was barred, yet, as the proviso was for the benefit of the decree-holders, they were competent to waive it and claim execution in respect of the instalments that fell due within three years before the date of their application for execution. Held, that this was not the case made out in the Courts below; and further, that the proviso could not be said to be waived, as there had been no acceptance of payment subsequent to the first default, nor a mere abstinence on the part of the decree-holder from seeking the benefit of the proviso, but, on the contrary, there had been an affirmative act done by him showing that he did not waive the benefit of the proviso, but claimed to execute the entire decree. BIR NARAIN PANDA v. Deed.

- (1) Construction of—Construction of deeds releasing future and contingent interest—Agreement excluding a possible question between the parties as to effect of words in a will under which they took their rights.—Three brothers, under their father's will, were entitled, each on attaining full age, to the testator's residuary estates in equal shares. When all had attained full age, two having been minors at the testator's death, they effected a separation of their interests derived from the will, and executed to one another instruments of compromise and partition containing words relating to possible claims which they gave up. One of the two younger brothers afterwards died, having taken, under the will of the other younger one, all the estate of the latter, who had died without issue before him. The eldest then attempted to raise the question whether, on the one hand, the brothers had taken under their father's will absolute interests, or, on the other, interests that were divested and went over to a surviving brother in the event of death without issue. As to this the Courts below differed, but the Appellate Court decided, and on this appeal the decision was affirmed, that the above instruments relinquished future demands, this claim included, relating to the brothers' estates under their father's will. Estoppel.

(1) Caused by representation on which action has followed—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Title, as between rival purchasers, supported by an estoppel affecting the assignee of the person estopped—Notice.—The law enacted in the Evidence Act, 1872, s. 115, relating to estoppel as a consequence of declaration, act, or omission, causing another's belief and action thereon, does not differ from the English Law on that subject of which the general principle is stated in Cairncross v. Lorimer, 3 H.L.C., 829. The main question in determining whether estoppel has been occasioned is whether the representation has caused the person to whom it has been made to act on the faith of it. The existence of estoppel does not depend on the motive or on the knowledge of the matter, on the part of the person making the representation. It is not essential that the intention of the person whose declaration, act, or omission has induced another to act, or to abstain from acting, should have been under a mistake or misapprehension. The word "intentionally" seems to have been used in s. 115 for the purpose of declaring the law as it had been stated to be in judgments in England. On this point the opinions expressed in the judgments in 2 A. 809 and 7 M. 3, R. & Disappr. A widow had held benami, for her husband during his life, property as to which he had executed a hibanama in her favour. After his death, she mortgaged the property, her son representing her in the transaction. After her death, in a suit between rival purchasers of part of the property comprised in the hibanama, and in the mortgage, the plaintiff derived his title from the son, having purchased his inherited share of the estate, while the defendants relied on a purchase at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by the mortgagee: Held, that s. 115 of the Evidence Act was applicable. The son had represented that the hiba gave a right to his mother to mortgage and consequently neither he nor his representative in estate could be allowed to deny the truth of this representation, intentionally made on his part, which also had been acted on by the mortgagee; and it made no difference that the son had not had a fraudulent intention. As a result of the estoppel upon the son, any purchaser of the mortgagee's interest, at a sale regularly carried out, would have acquired a valid title to the property, although such purchaser might have been fully aware of all the circumstances. *SARAT CHUNDER DEY v. (2) Purchaser at execution sale—Representative—Mortgage by alleged benamidar—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Onus of proof.—E, being in possession of the documents of title, mortgaged land to the plaintiff E and his father A borrowed money from one R, who obtained a decree against A, and purchased the land at the execution sale. In a suit for foreclosure of the plaintiff's mortgage against E, and R, the lower Courts held that A was the true owner, but the lower appellate Court did not decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was a valid transaction: Held, on second appeal, that R acquired the property adversely to A and not as his representative and that there was no estoppel against him. Held further, that it was not necessary to decide whether the plaintiff's mortgage was valid as against A, the plaintiff not having raised the question in the lower Courts, but that assuming the mortgage to be valid, the onus did not lie upon R to prove that the mortgage was not binding upon A. *BASHI CHUNDER SEN v. The depositions of witnesses given in a counter-case may be used as evidence against them on their trial as accused persons, but such depositions could only be evidence against the persons making them. The mere subpoenaing of a witness or ordering him to go into the witness-box does not compel him to give any particular answer or to answer any particular question. The words "shall be compelled to give" in s. 132, Evidence Act, apply to pressure put upon a witness after he is in the box, and when he asks to be excused from answering a question. was made :—" In this case the sale was stayed awaiting the disposal of the regular suit. It being not necessary to keep the case pending, it is ordered that, attachment being allowed to stand, the case be struck off for the present." The judgment-debtor, the father of a joint Hindu family subject to the Mitakshara law, having died, a fresh application for execution was subsequently made against his estate. The heirs of the judgment-debtor objected to the application, on the ground that the decree having been passed against their father alone, it could not be executed against the joint family estate, now theirs by operation of Mitakshara law. Held, that, inasmuch as there was an attachment subsisting at the time of the application, the estate of the judgment-debtor under attachment at the time of his death was liable after his death, even though it had passed to the surviving members of the joint Mitakshara family. BENI PERSHAD v. The decree was subsequently set aside on B's appeal, but no order as to restitution was made in it: Held, on motion by B, that he was entitled to be put into the same position as before the partition was made (i.e., joint possession with A) and to remove any tenants who refused to vacate. ROHNI SINGH v. Pro. Fraud.

- (1) Suit in Recorder's Court to set aside for fraud decree obtained in Small Cause Court—Perjury.—A plaintiff who charges another with fraud must himself prove the fraud, and he is not relieved from this obligation because the defendant has himself told an untrue story. Where a decree has been obtained by a fraud practised on another, by which that other has been prevented from placing his case before the tribunal which was called upon to adjudicate upon it in the way most to his advantage, the decree is not binding upon him and may be set aside in a separate suit, and not only by an application made in the suit in which the decree was passed to the Court by which it was passed. But it is not the law that because a person against whom a decree has been passed alleges that it is wrong and that it was obtained by perjury committed by or at the instance of the other side (which is fraud of the worst description) that he can obtain a rehearing of the questions in dispute in a fresh suit, by merely changing the form in which he places it before the Court, and alleging in his plaint that the first decree was obtained by the perjury of the person in whose favour it was given. In this case a suit brought in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to set aside a decree of the Court of Small Causes at Rangoon on the ground that it had been obtained by fraud was held under the circumstances of the case to be not maintainable. Gift without delivery of possession—Transfer of possession—Sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 123, 129—Immoveable property—Acceptance of gift.—P executed a deed of gift of certain property in favour of the plaintiff in 1877 before the Transfer of Property Act was passed, and the deed was duly registered. In 1881 P sold certain portions of the same property to the defendants, and gave possession to them of such portions. P died six years after the execution of the deed of gift, and after his death some of the title deeds of the property covered by the deed of gift came into possession of the plaintiff. Both the lower Courts found that there had been no delivery of possession given by the donor nor acceptance by the donee. In a suit brought five years after the death of P for possession of the property the subject of the alleged gift, held, that mere registration was not sufficient to make the gift complete, according to the Hindu Law, under which some possession or acceptance by the donee was necessary; there being neither possession nor acceptance, the suit should be dismissed. *LAKSHIMONI DASI v. - (1) Mitakshara—Debts incurred by agent of joint family—Sale of joint family property in execution of decree—Suit and decree against managing members of a joint family business—Effect of sale against other members, though not parties to decree—Execution proceedings, setting aside of.—The plaintiffs, who were the members of a joint Hindu family, sought to recover a share in certain properties on the allegation that they were joint family properties, but wrongfully sold in execution of a decree upon a bond executed by their paternal uncles L and S and one B.S. The family was a trading family and carried on a money-lending business under the supervision of L and S. One Z M had dealings with L and S, and in the course of such dealings he deposited a certain sum of money with them for which the above bond was executed, in which certain properties belonging to the family were pledged as security. Subsequently Z M sued on this bond, obtained a decree and put up the properties for sale, which were purchased by some of the defendants, who dispossessed the plaintiffs. The share of the properties advertised for sale, certified in the sale certificates granted to the defendants to have passed to them, was the share of the whole family in the properties sold, but it was described as the right, title and interest of L and S, the persons sued, held, that L and S, though not the managers of the family, were yet its accredited agents in the management of the money-lending business, and as such had the authority of the other members to pledge the family properties for a joint debt contracted in the ordinary course of that business. Held also, that the sale having been under a decree in respect of a joint debt of the family, the whole interest of the family in the properties in dispute passed at the sale, although L and S only out of the members of the family were sued. Held, further, that in execution proceedings the Courts will look at the substance of the transaction and will not be disposed to set aside an execution upon mere technical grounds when they find it is substantially right. *SHEO PERSHAD SINGH v. Debts incurred in transactions, the character of which is no more than imprudent or unconscientiously imprudent, or unreasonable, are debts to which a pious duty attaches under the Mitakshara Law. Semble—That 'antecedent debt' in the meaning of the Full Bench means, with

Hence upon a partition enforced by a stranger in respect of property which forms merely one item of the joint estate, the widow is not entitled to such share, if notwithstanding such division, the main estate remains undivided. Held, upon the facts of this case, that the widow was not entitled to such share. BARAHI DEBI v. - (1) Alienation by Hindu widow—Legal necessity—Pilgrimage never carried out—Debt barred by limitation.—The payment by a Hindu widow of her husband's debts, though barred by limitation, is a pious duty for the performance of which a Hindu widow may alienate her property. In the case of an alienation by a Hindu widow of her husband's property on the ground of legal necessity, the alienee is sufficiently protected if he satisfies himself by bona fide inquiries of the existence of such necessity, although he may be in fact mistaken. The money was not received by her as a capitalized part of the inheritance, but as income that had been accumulated during her tenure of her widow's estate. The widow did not act showing an intention on her part to make this sum of money, the greater part of which she invested in Government securities, part of the family inheritance for the benefit of the heirs. After the lapse of about twenty years she disposed of it as her own. Held, that the money so invested by the widow belonged to her as income derived from her widow's estate, and was subject to her disposition. *SAODAMINI DAS v. - (1) Construction of—Life estate—Gift over—Male line, succession in—Malik—Putra poutrade krama.—Case of the construction of a will and codicil, dated in 1865 and 1868 respectively, in which it was held that one Lolit took a life-estate only, and that a gift over on failure of male issue of Lolit at any remote time, was bad. The word malik is consistent with a life-estate; and may well be applied to a person who owns an estate for life as well as to the absolute owner. Ordinarily, without other expressions indicating in what sense the word is used, it implies absolute ownership. The words putra poutrade krama have always been understood as words of general inheritance and, in the absence of a contrary intention being shown, would convey an absolute estate. But in construing both the word malik and the words putra putrade krama, the expressions in the whole will must be taken together without any one being insisted upon to the exclusion of others. Held in this case, notwithstanding the words malik and putra putrade krama, that there being expressions excluding the succession of females and conferring the succession to male heirs, and the gift over referring to the failure of male issue at any remote time, and not to the event of Lolit's death without leaving male issue, and there being also expressions indicating an intention not to grant an absolute alienable estate, the will should be construed as giving to Lolit only a life-estate. *CHUKKUN LAL ROY v. C. B., whom he constituted the guardian of his daughter and of his only son during their minority, of the sum of Rs. 225 "monthly and every month for the maintenance and education of my said son and the support of my said daughter and such other persons as live in my house and are supported at my expense," and further provided that all "the residue of my estate, moveable and immoveable, with all accumulations and additions," should be conveyed to his son on his attaining majority, "subject nevertheless to the trust of maintaining my said daughter." The daughter had married a man of means and did not need any maintenance: Held, in a suit by the daughter for a construction of the will and for a specific sum to be set apart for her maintenance, that the plaintiff was not entitled to anything by way of a separate allowance for maintenance; she was only entitled under the will (apart from her annuity of Rs. 5 a month) to be provided for in case she were otherwise unprovided for. Where the construction of a will was not so difficult as to have required the assistance of the Court, it was held to be not a case where the estate should bear the costs. The suit was therefore dismissed with costs. NARAYANI DAS v. ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL OF BENGAL, 21 C. 683

Such departure must be his departure, and the intent to depart must be proved to be his intent. - (1) Act (XXXII of 1839)—Interest on mortgage money—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 88—Charge on mortgaged property—Interest where none is stipulated for after due date of mortgage.—The Court has power under the Interest Act (XXXII of 1839) to give interest on mortgage money, as it is money payable at a certain time, and under a written instrument ; and the terms of s. 88 of the Transfer of Property Act make such interest recoverable or payable out of the mortgaged property. The interest on the mortgage is not necessarily only the interest which the parties stipulated by the mortgage deed should be paid, but would also include interest which under the law is payable, e.g., interest after the due date of the mortgage, where there is no stipulation for interest after the due date. *BIKRAMJIT TEWARI v. A charge was framed against him in respect of the using of each set of receipts, and he was tried on these three charges and convicted and sentenced. On appeal it was contended that a separate charge should have been framed in respect of each of the documents, as the using of each document constituted a distinct and separate offence, and that consequently the trial was illegal and should be set aside, the accused having been tried for more than three offences in one and the same trial. Held, that as the "using" charged was the putting in of each set of documents with the respective written statements in the three suits, and as there was nothing to show that any of the documents had been used at any other time, there was only one using in respect of each set of documents and that there was therefore no valid ground for questioning the conviction. (1) Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 16 (c), proviso—Recorder of Rangoon, jurisdiction of.—The plaintiff sued in the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon to recover damages for trespass on land in his own possession situate outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court; asking at the same time for an injunction restraining the defendant from further acts of trespass. Both plaintiffs and defendant resided within the limits of the original jurisdiction of the Recorder's Court. Held—(1) that the plaintiff having alleged that the land was in his possession was not entitled to the benefit of the proviso to s. 16 of the Code of Civil Procedure; and (2) that a suit for damage to land cannot be said to be a suit for which relief can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant even, though it may be joined with a claim for an injunction; and that for the above reasons the Recorder had no jurisdiction to try the suit. *CRISP v. (3) Of Civil Court—Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 11—Suit for right to property and for office or emolument—Suit relating to caste questions—Right of suit by bhakats of religious fraternity expelled by other members for re-admission into fraternity—Powers of fraternity to impose fine and cause expulsion until fine is paid—Cause of action.—The plaintiffs were some of the bhakats or members of a satra or religious fraternity, and they claimed the right to enter the kirtanghar or prayer hall and perform their prayers, and other rites therein. They alleged in the plaint that the management of the affairs of the satra, "including the distribution of honorarium and offerings and the appointment and dismissal of the satria," or head of the fraternity, was vested in the samuha or entire body of bhakats, and that they and their forefathers had been, from generation to generation, in receipt of the honorarium and offerings, and had been performing the rites and ceremonies according to the custom of the satra until they had been obstructed and interfered with by the defendants in such performance and had been expelled from the kirtanghar. The prayer of the plaint was that the plaintiffs' right to enter the kirtanghar to perform the said rites and ceremonies and to receive their share of the offerings might be established; that the kirtanghar from which they had been dispossessed might be made over to them for the purpose of such performance, and that a prohibitory injunction might be granted enjoining the defendants not to obstruct them in such performance. The defendants, who were the satria and the other members of the fraternity forming the majority of the entire body of bhakats, denied the rights claimed by the plaintiffs as bhakats, and stated that the satra was governed by the satria and a select body of bhakats, that the plaintiff No. 1 had received mantra or spiritual initiation from one Saruram, contrary to the rules of the fraternity, and had been convicted moreover of a criminal offence, and a fine of Rs. 100 had accordingly been imposed on him and his partizans by the governing body of the satra, whose orders they had disobeyed by refusing to pay the fine, and they had, therefore, been excluded from entering the kirtan-ghar: and the defendants contended that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction in the matter, and that the suit was, therefore, not maintainable. The lower Courts held that the Civil Court could entertain the suit, and they made decrees practically ordering the admission of the plaintiffs to the kirtan-ghar on their complying with the order imposing the fine. Held, that having regard to the prayer for possession of the kirtan-ghar, and to the allegations made in the plaint about the position and privileges of the bhakats and their rights to honorarium and offerings, and to the defendants' denial of those rights and of the plaintiffs' right to enter the kirtan-ghar, the suit must be regarded as one in which right to property and to an office, within the meaning of the explanation to s. 11 of the Civ. Pro. Code, is contested, and, therefore, notwithstanding that the honorarium and offerings were of trifling and merely nominal value, one of a civil nature and cognizable by the Civil Court. Held also, that the rules laid down in the English cases as to expulsion from clubs or voluntary associations which people are free to join or not and where any one who joins may well be taken to be bound not only, by its general rules, but also by any special orders made by its members with regard to him in accordance with those rules, are not applicable with regard to caste unions or religious fraternities in India, to which people belong not of choice but of necessity, being born in their respective castes or sects, and the consequences of exclusion from which are far more serious and affect a person's status in a far greater degree than those of expulsion from a club. In such religious castes or fraternities the protection of Courts of Justice, even though presided over by Judges of a different religious persuasion, against expulsion, is much more needed than in clubs or voluntary associations. Cases of expulsion from them were, therefore, cognizable by the Civil Courts. Held, further, that even if the rules laid down in the English cases were applicable, they were subject to a qualification which leaves it open to a Court of Justice to interfere with the decision of a private association on grounds, one of which is that the decision is contrary to natural justice. The decision of the lower Courts therefore ordering the re-admission of the plaintiffs to the kirtan-ghar, on their complying with the order imposing the fine, was not such an interference with the decision of the domestic tribunal of the parties as is opposed to the cases cited as to clubs, &c., as it would have been contrary to natural justice for the fraternity to enforce such exclusion after the reason for it had ceased, and make the disqualification of the plaintiffs permanent. Held, on the statements in the plaint, that the plaintiffs had a cause of action, and the suit could not have been properly dismissed on the finding of fact by the lower appellate Court that the plaintiffs' exclusion from the kirtan-ghar was justified by their refusal to pay the fine imposed on them. *JAGANNATH CHURN v. Bengal Act VI of 1862, requires a suit to be brought in some Court within the district in which the land lies in respect of which the agency was created, and the question where the cause of action arose is material only in determining in which subdivision of the district the suit is to be brought. *NILMONEY SINGH DEO v. (1) Apportionment of rent—Decree apportioning rent reserved in a mokurari lease, to the land transferred—Lessee getting possession of less land than stated in lease—Right of lessee to abatement of rent.—A decree had determined that lands, leased in mokurari to a lessee, with a fixed rent thereon, were less in extent than they were specified to be in the pottas that comprised them, the lessors not having title to the whole; and the lessee had obtained possession of the less estate. Held, that the lessee was entitled to a corresponding abatement of the rent reserved. The revenue-paying mehal, within which were the lands subject to the mokurari, such lands being shares of mouzas therein, was afterwards sold for arrears, under Act XI of 1859. The purchaser at that sale was sued by the mokuraridar, to make good her incumbrance under s. 54 of the Act. The lease was maintained by the decree that followed, but only as to part of the shares specified in the pottas, and the lessee obtained possession of that part only. In this suit for mesne profits brought by the lessee against the purchaser's heir, who filed a cross suit against her for rent, it was held that, as the lessee had not proved that she having had possession under the leases, had been dispossessed by the purchaser, there had not been an eviction in the proper sense of the word. But when, in her suit for possession, part only was decreed to her, and she was precluded by the result from getting a substantial part, her possession was the same as if she had been evicted. She, therefore, had the same equity for an apportionment, as if she had been evicted. On the facts it was rightly found by the first Court that the leases were not taken with knowledge on the part of the lessee that the title was a doubtful one. IMAMBANDI BEGUM v. (b).—The plaintiffs sued to eject the defendant from certain land, alleging that it formed part of their holding, and that the defendant was their sub-tenant. The defendant denied the plaintiffs' title, and set up the title of the third person adverse to that of the plaintiffs. The lower appellate Court found that the defendant was the plaintiff's tenant, and both the lower Courts held that the defendant by denying the title of his landlord had forfeited his rights as a tenant, and was therefore liable to be treated as a trespasser, and as such to be evicted without notice. Held that in all cases to which the Bengal Tenancy Act applies there] can be no eviction on the ground of forfeiture incurred by denying the title of the landlord, and that it having been found by the lower appellate Court that the defendant was an under-ryot of the plaintiffs, he could not be evicted from his holding except after notice to quit, as prescribed in s. 49, cl. Ss. 17 and 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act recognize the transfer of a share of a holding, and enable the transferee to be regarded as one of the tenants in respect of the holding. *MOHESH CHUNDER GHOSE v. - (1) Osathowla—Re-entry—Forfeiture—Sale in execution—Saleable interest—Alienation by operation of law—Conditions restraining alienation—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 266.—A sued to recover possession of a certain land which was leased in osathowla by his father to B. The lease expressly prohibited the lessee and his heir from making any assignment of the property either by sale or gift, but it did not contain any provision for forfeiture or for re-entry by reason of an assignment in violation of its terms, nor was there any provision restricting a sale in execution of a decree. The osathowla passed to B's executor and was sold in execution of a decree against B. Held, that the sale passed a good title. It is clear law in India, as in England, that a general restriction on assignment does not apply to an assignment by operation of law taking effect in invitum, as a sale under an execution. Held also, that even if there had been a provision in the lease for forfeiture or for re-entry by reason of an assignment in violation of its provisions, it would not have the effect of invalidating the sale in execution, which has always been held not to be of itself a breach of a covenant not to assign. B, and also his executor, at the time of the sale, had an interest in the lease, which was "saleable" within the meaning of s. 266 of the Civ. Pro. Code. *GOLAK NATH ROY CHOWDHRY v. three years from the termination of the agency, held, that the case came within the proviso of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, and the suit was not barred by limitation. Held, further, that in suits for money misappropriated by an agent where fraudulent accounts have been rendered, the plaintiff has an extended period of limitation of one year, which, in the words of s. 33 of Act X of 1859, runs from the time when the fraud is first known to him; but in any particular case the Court, having regard to the nature of the fraud, the facility with which it may be known, and the likelihood of attention being called to it, may infer such knowledge when the means of knowledge first come, or have for a reasonable time been, within the plaintiff's reach, or, in other words, may hold the plaintiff fixed with constructive knowledge of the fraud. The defence was that the latter was entitled to the half share in dispute, having been adopted to the deceased under a power given by him to his widow, and exercised by her. Held, that the suit having, in order to succeed, brought into question the second adoption, was a suit to set aside an adoption within the meaning of art. 129, sch. II, Act IX of 1871, the Limitation Act in force for a period after the cause of suit had arisen. With reference to the coming into operation of the subsequent Limitation Act XV of 1877, s. 2 of the latter Act prevented the revival of any right to sue already barred by the previous Act, as the right now claimed had been. It was nevertheless clear that if this suit had not been barred, the second adoption could not have been held valid under Hindu law as an adoption; because, by that law, a second adoption cannot be made during the life of a son previously adopted. *MOHESH NARAIN MUNSHI v. In this suit, brought by the creditor after the death of the widow, against the reversioner, more than six years from the time when the debt had been payable, it was held that, unless the debt had been effectively charged on immoveable property within art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, the suit would be barred; and the charge alleged to have been made on immoveables was found not to have been, in fact a binding one. KAMESWAR PERSHAD v. (a).—In a suit for possession of land on the allegation that it was mortgaged by the defendant's father in July 1849 to the plaintiff's predecessors, by way of conditional sale, by a deed which fixed no time for payment, and made no provision as to the mortgagee taking possession; that the mortgagor made various payments down to 1875, and that subsequently foreclosure proceedings were instituted under Reg. XVII of 1806, and the mortgage foreclosed in 1877, the lower appellate Court found that the deed was duly executed, but that the foreclosure proceedings were irregular and invalid. Held that inasmuch as the deed fixed no time of payment, and the suit was brought more than twelve years after the date of the mortgage-deed, and also more than twelve years after the date of the alleged last payment to the mortgagee, which was in 1875, the suit was barred by art. 132, sch. II of the Limitation Act. Having regard to the provisions of s. 67, cl. (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgage being by conditional sale, the mortgagee was not entitled to the remedy by sale, and therefore art. 147 did not apply to the case: Held, also, that inasmuch as the mortgagee did not become entitled to possession after foreclosure proceedings under Reg. XVII of 1806, the proceedings having been found to have been invalid, and as the mortgage deed did not contain any provision as to the mortgagee taking possession, art. 135 was not applicable. *NILCOMAL PRAMANICK v. - (13) Art. 141—Act IX of 1871, art. 142—Dismissal of Hindu daughter's claim as heiress of a share as barred by time, effect of, in regard to right of reversioner after her—Res judicata—Adverse possession.—In a suit in which the parties were descendants of a common ancestor, who had daughters only, one of the latter having been the mother of the first defendant, who was in possession of the ancestral estate, the plaintiff, son of the last surviving daughter, claimed on her death, possession of his share by inheritance, and also of a share acquired by him by gift from another of the defendants, a son of another daughter of the common ancestor. The defence was that a suit, brought by the plaintiff's mother in her lifetime, against the same defendant, for her share, had been dismissed by a final judgment on the ground of her claim having been barred by limitation. Held that the estate, which would have devolved on the plaintiff's mother as survivor of her sisters, was similar to the inheritance of a widow, the same result following the dismissal of the daughter's suit that ensued in regard to the decree adverse to the widow in 9 M.I.A. 539, where a decree, duly obtained against the widow, bound the reversioner. The previous decree dismissing the daughter's suit as barred was binding on her son. His claim therefore failed, not only as to his share by inheritance, but, for similar reasons, as to the share acquired by him from the defendant donor. Art. 141 in the schedule to Act XV of 1877, fixing the date of the female heir's decease as the starting point for limitation, did not alter the existing law as to the effect of a decree adverse to the predecessor as representing the estate, nor did it give a new starting point to the successor, nor did art. 142 in the schedule to Act IX of 1871. *HARI NATH CHATTERJEE v. - (14) Art. 142—Possession, suit for—General practice of abiding by concurrent decisions on fact—Evidence as to ownership of property held benami.—Two properties bought by a Mahomedan father in his life-time, but held in the names of members of his family, were the subject of dispute after his death, the question being whether they belonged to his estate, so as to be divisible among the sharers in the inheritance, or had been held so that the beneficial interest in them belonged to those of his children who had been born of one of his two wives, excluding the sons born of his other wife. The Courts below decided in favour of the sons of the wife first married. As to one of the properties they concurred in finding the facts entitling these sons alone, and the committee preferred not to depart from the general rule as to concurrent decisions on fact. As to the other property, both the Courts found that there had been a transfer from the name of the original benamidar into the name of the wife first married; but whereas the first Court found that this change was intended to give her the beneficial interest, which thenceforth belonged to her, and to her sons after her, the Appellate Court found that this transfer was simply from one benamidar to another, although after the death of the mother the property had been treated as that of her sons. Accordingly as to this the evidence was considered, and their Lordships inclined to the view taken by the first Court. However, the title not having been clearly proved, they preferred to rest their decision on the possession found. The claimants, and their father before them, having together been out of possession for more than twelve years before action brought, limitation was an absolute bar. *ASGHAR REZA v.  (17) Art. 179, Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 232, 248—Application for execution by transferee of decree—Benamidar.—The words "in accordance with law" in art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act mean in accordance with the law relating to execution of decrees. Under s. 232 of the Civ. Pro. Code, the Court executing the decree after giving notice to the decree-holder and judgment-debtor and hearing their objections, if any, has an absolute discretion to allow or to refuse to allow execution to proceed at the instance of a person to whom a decree has been transferred by an assignment in writing, when therefore, a decree is transferred, (really or nominally) by assignment in writing and the ostensible transferee executes the decree with the permission of the Court, the proceedings taken and the application on which they are based are in accordance with law as between such transferee and the judgment-debtor, although he may be merely a benamidar, and such proceedings and application if made in proper time are sufficient to keep the decree alive. Pro. Code (Act VIII of 1859), s. 206 (Act XIV of 1882), s. 258.*—A decree dated 22nd Cheyt 1295 (18th April 1882) provided "that the defendants do pay the decretal money as per instalments given below, otherwise the plaintiffs will have the power to cancel the instalments and realise the entire amount." The first instalment was made payable on 30th Cheyt 1295 (26th April 1888), and the other six instalments on the 30th of the months of Magh and Bysak in the three following years. In an application made on 9th February 1892 for execution of the decree, the decree-holder stated that only the first instalment had been paid, and asked for execution for the amount remaining due under the decree, and the judgment-debtors denied having paid any of the instalments. Held that the clause in the decree to the effect that on non-payment of an instalment by the specified date it should be in power of the decree-holder to realise the full amount was not intended to give him the option of waiving the default if he pleased, but that it implied nothing more than the usual condition that on non-payment of an instalment the whole decretal amount would become exigible; if, therefore, the first instalment had not been paid, the application for execution, not having been made within three years from the date when the whole amount became due, was barred by art. 179 of sch. II of Limitation Act; and the case was remanded for final decision of the question whether or not payment of the first instalment had been made. Held, further, that although under the provisions of s. 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code the payment in question, if made, could not be recognised as a payment or adjustment of the decree, yet it was competent to the decree-holder to prove such payment for the purpose of showing that the execution of the decree was not barred. There is no material difference in this respect between s. 258 of the Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), and s. 206 of the old Code (Act VIII of 1859) on which the case of 4 B L.R., F.B., 130, was decided. HURRI PERSHAD CHOWDERY v. NASIB SINGH, 21 C. 542 ...

At the time of this application the heirs had neither taken out a certificate under Act VII of 1889, nor had they applied for substitution of their names on the record. - (23) Art. 179, cl. 4—Execution of decree—Step in aid of execution.—In execution of a decree certain property was attached and the sale proclamation issued and served. Prior to the sale the decree-holder applied to the Court executing the decree to release a portion of the property from attachment, and, stating that he had at the request of the judgment-debtor, decided not to proceed with the sale, asked that the sale might be postponed and the case struck off the file, the attachment, so far as the remainder of the property was concerned, being maintained. The application was acceded to and the case struck off the file. On a subsequent application to execute the decree, held, that the above application was not an application to take some step in aid of execution of the decree within the meaning of cl. 4, art. 179 of sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877, as it had rather the effect of temporarily retarding the execution, and that the application to continue the attachment under the circumstances of the case, even supposing it to have been a substantive application apart from the other prayers coupled with it, had merely the effect of leaving things precisely where they were, and did not advance the execution in any respect whatsoever. - (24) Art. 180—Execution of decree—Order of Her Majesty in Council—Revivor—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 230, 248.—A decree was obtained against the judgment-debtor in the Zillah Court in 1860 which was reversed by the High Court, but was restored on appeal to Her Majesty in Council on the 22nd May 1872. This decree was assigned to the present decree-holders on the 10th April 1873. Between the 27th November 1872 and 10th April 1880 various applications for execution of the Order in Council were made, attachment processes issued, and proceedings struck off. In 1880 the decree-holders brought a suit to establish the right of the judgment-debtor to a bond in favour of the latter for a certain sum of money, and on the 15th March 1881 they obtained a decree which was upheld by the High Court on the 20th March 1882. After this decree, between the 10th February 1883 and the 19th April 1886, a number of applications were made for execution, which were struck off. Another application was made on the 25th July 1887 for execution. On the 28th October 1887 the judgment-debtor filed an objection on the ground that the decree was barred. On the 20th December 1887 the objection was overruled and execution issued, but the proceedings were struck off on the 28th March 1888. Then, after another application was made on the 28th September 1888, the present application was made on the 19th November 1890, when the judgment-debtor filed an objection on the ground that the decree of which execution was sought was barred by the law of limitation: Held that the decree which was sought to be enforced was an "Order of Her Majesty in Council" within the meaning of art. 180 of the Limitation Act. Art. 180 is independent of s. 230 of the Civ. Pro. Code. S. 230 has no application to decrees made by the High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. In art. 180, Orders in Council stand in the same category as decrees of Courts established by Royal Charter in the exercise of such jurisdiction. Execution of the decree therefore was not barred by s. 230 of the Code. In art. 180 of the Limitation Act the term 'revived' must be read in one and the same sense in connection with the High Court decrees and Orders in Council, and not distributively. Following the interpretation of revivor in 6 C. 504, 8 C.L.R. 23, there having been in the present case an order for execution of the decree made after notice to the judgment-debtor, there was such a revivor as prevented the execution of the decree from being barred by art. 180. Held also, that the objection of the judgment-debtor was res judicata. The same contention was raised in the former application and overruled by the judgment of the Subordinate Judge dated the 20th December 1887. FUTTEH NARAIN CHOWDHRY v. The words “personally interested” as used in s. 555 of the Code of Criminal Procedure do not merely mean “privately interested” or “interested as a private individual,” but include such an interest as a District Magistrate must have had under the above circumstances in the conviction of the accused. Illegitimacy of birth—Insufficiency of father's acknowledgment without intention to legitimate.—On the question of the legitimacy of a son born to a Mahomedan by a Burmese woman, the question did not arise on this appeal whether the father could have entered into a valid marriage with the mother without her having relinquished Buddhism. The Court below found against her alleged conversion to the Mahomedan religion; and also found upon the facts that no marriage of the parents as distinguished from concubinage had taken place. The latter finding was affirmed. As to the question whether the son born to them had been legitimated by the father's acknowledgment of him, it was held, that, under the Mahomedan law, the legitimation of a son, born out of legal wedlock, may be effected by the force of his father's acknowledgment of his being of legitimate birth; but that a mere recognition of sonship is insufficient to effect it. Acknowledgment in the sense meant by that law is required, viz., of antecedent right, and not a mere recognition of paternity. ABDUL RAZAK v. Mahomedan Law—2.—Custom.

Succession to property among Kanchans—Practices not recognizable by law as customs—Immoral customs.—Among Mahomedan Kanchans, practices relating to their holding and inheritance of property, having an immoral tendency, were not recognizable as customs, or enforceable as law. To recognize practices tending to promote prostitution, which the Mahomedan law reprobates and prohibits absolutely, would be contrary to the policy of that law. Where property left by a female Kanchani, deceased, was claimed by her legitimate kindred, it was held that an "adoption," so called, in conformity with those practices, had not operated to separate her from the family in which she was born. The mode in which her property had been acquired was not the subject of the present question, which was only concerned with the right of personal succession to it; and that property was held to be distributable according to the rules of the Mahomedan law governing inheritance. *GHASITI v. The lower appellate Court held that the deed created a valid endowment to the extent of Rs. 75 per annum only, and that, subject to such charge, the properties were alienable. Held, by the majority of the FULL BENCH (PETHERAM, C.J., TREVELYAN and GHOSE, JJ.; AMEER ALI, J., dissenting) upon the construction of the deed and upon the authority of 17 C. 498, L.R., 17 I.A. 28, that the instrument did not create a valid wakf, there being no substantial dedication to religious and charitable purposes. Held, by the majority of the FULL BENCH (PRINSEP, GHOSE, and AMEER ALI, JJ.; PETHERAM, C.J., and TREVELYAN, J., dissenting) that the charge of Rs. 75 per annum should be allowed. Held, by PRINSEP, TREVELYAN, and GHOSE, JJ., that the course of the decisions should not be disturbed by reference to texts which may favour the idea that a settlement on the settlor and his descendants in perpetuity is a pious act. Held, by PRINSEP and TREVELYAN, JJ., that upon the findings of the lower Courts no second appeal lay, and it was not, therefore, necessary to express any opinion as to the validity of the instrument. AMEER ALI, J.—The disposition in question, viewed according to the Mahomedan law, which supplies ample safeguards against fraud, created a valid endowment. There is a consensus of opinion among Mahomedan lawyers of every school and sect that wakifs on children, kindred, or neighbours in perpetuity are valid. To hold that a wakf, the benefaction of which is bestowed wholly or in part on the wakif's family and descendants, is invalid, would have the effect of abrogating an important branch of the Mahomedan law. A wakf is a permanent benefaction for the good of God's creatures. The wakf may bestow the usufruct, but not the property, upon whomsoever he chooses, and in any manner whatever, only it must endure for ever. If he bestows the usufructs in the first instance upon those whose maintenance is obligatory on him, or if he gives it to his descendants so long as they exist, to prevent their falling into indigence, it is a pious act, even more pious than giving to the general body of the poor. When a wakf is created constituting the family or descendants of the wakif the recipients of the charity so long as they exist, the poor are expressly or impliedly brought in to impart permanency to the endowment. The subsequent conduct of the wakif cannot in any way affect the wakf. BIKNAI MIA v. SHUK LAL PODDAR, 20 C. 116 (F.B.) ...

Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 244, 583—Separate suit.*—R brought a suit against K for possession of certain land, and obtained a decree. K appealed, but pending the appeal R took possession of the land in execution of his decree. K was successful in the appeal, and was restored to possession in execution of the decree of the appellate Court, which, however, was silent as to mesne profits. In an application by K for mesne profits for the period during which R was unlawfully in possession. Held that K was entitled to restitution of such mesne profits in the execution proceedings, and it was not necessary for him to bring a separate suit to recover them. He was entitled to such restitution, either by reason of this power conferred by s. 583 of the Civ. Pro. Code upon the Court which passed the decree, or by reason of the inherent right that the Court has to order the restitution of the thing which has been improperly taken under the erroneous decree set aside in appeal. *RAJA SINGH v. Minor.

(1) Necessaries—Bond, registered, executed by minor—Registration of bond by minor—Limitation to suit against a minor on a registered bond executed by him for necessities—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 68—Registration Act (III of 1877), s. 35.—On the 20th April 1886, a sum of money was advanced by A to a minor who executed a bond in respect thereof and duly registered the same. The money was required by the minor to provide for his defence in certain criminal proceedings then pending against him on a charge of dacoity and was used by him for that purpose. On the 18th June 1892 A instituted a suit against the minor for the amount due on the bond. It was urged on behalf of the minor, who had not attained majority at the time the suit was filed, that he was not liable to A for the amount advanced; that it was not advanced for "necessaries;" that he was not liable under the bond, and that the fact of its being registered could not help the plaintiff, and consequently, even assuming that the money was required for "necessaries" the suit was barred by limitation, being brought more than three years after the advance was made. Held, that the liberty of the minor being at stake the money advanced must be taken to have been borrowed for necessities within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act. Held further, that there being nothing to show that the minor appeared to be such to the Registrar at the time of registration so as to enable the Registrar to refuse registration.

under s. 35 of the Registration Act, and the concealment of the fact of the executant's minority both by himself and by the plaintiff from the Registrar not amounting to fraud so as to invalidate the registration proceedings as against the minor, the Registrar had in no way violated the law relating to the registration of documents, and the bond must be taken to have been duly registered. Held also, that in such a case the bond could not be ignored and treated as non-existent, being the basis of the suit, and that on its being proved to have been executed by the minor in respect of money advanced for necessities, effect must be given to the fact of registration, and the suit was not barred by limitation, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. SHAM CHARAN MAL v. - (4) Suit on behalf of a person alleged to be but not in fact a minor—Procedure to be adopted when suit is instituted on behalf of an alleged minor who is not so in fact.—When a suit is instituted by a person alleging himself to be a minor, and the suit is brought through a next friend, and when it is found that the plaintiff was not at the date of the institution of the suit in fact a minor, the Court should not dismiss the suit, as the defendant can be fully indemnified by the payment of his costs. In such a case the proper remedy is for the defendant to apply to have the plaint taken off the file or amended, and if it be not amended the next friend's name may be treated as mere surplusage and the suit be allowed to proceed. TAQUI JAN v. - (1) Sale of mortgaged property—Relative rights of first and second mortgagees of the same property—Mortgage decree giving terms of redemption of the first by the second—Compound interest.—There being a first and a second mortgage of the same property, a mortgage decree (that upon the first by consent) was obtained by each mortgagee respectively neither of them being a party to the decree obtained by the other. In the first mortgage it was agreed that, on default by the mortgagor, interest at 12 per cent. should be paid on the principal and interest taken together, the latter being calculated with annual rests. At a judicial sale under the decree obtained by the first mortgagee, he became the purchaser of the greater part of the property. In this suit, which was brought by the first mortgagee's heir now representing him against the second mortgagee, making the mortgagors parties for declaration of his rights, it was decided that the second mortgagee was entitled to redeem the first mortgage. But the appellate Court, referring to the consent decree having given simple interest only, made this the basis of an inference that compound interest must now be disallowed: Held, that this was not the right inference; and compound

Form of mortgage—Sale—Construction whether lands had been sold or mortgaged—Evidence—Documents explained by parol—Waste land grants—Usufructuary mortgage.—Waste lands, granted in 1870, were transferred by the grantee in 1871 to his creditor, since deceased, from whose representatives in 1891 he claimed redemption, alleging that the transfer had been made upon a mortgage with possession. The grantee had previously, in 1870, mortgaged the lands to this creditor to secure advances taken for part payment of the purchase money. In 1871 they arranged that the creditor should advance the entire balance, and they jointly petitioned for an entry to be made, in the register of waste land grants that the ownership had been transferred from the one to the other of them. This entry was made, and endorsements to the same effect were made on the documents of grant. On the question whether the transaction was a mortgage, or a sale as the defendants alleged it to be, general evidence was given, in addition to the documentary; and among the facts in favour of the plaintiff was that the creditor had retained uncanceled, till his death, all acknowledgments for the money advanced by him in the transaction. Although, under other circumstances, and on the documents alone, the inference might have been that there had been a sale for some undisclosed consideration, yet, on the true construction of the joint petition, and the orders made thereon, the proper conclusion was that the entry and endorsements were intended only as a record of the arrangement proposed by the parties, and sanctioned by the registering officer. The intention was not to have an absolute sale. The transaction was held to be a mortgage which the plaintiff was entitled to redeem. KADER MOIDEEN v. NEPEAN, 21 C. 882 (P.C.) = 21 I.A. 96 = L. Jurisdiction of—Decree containing order for ascertainment of mesne profits from date of suit to date of recovery of possession—Effect on jurisdiction of such mesne profits added to amount of decree exceeding jurisdiction of the Munsif.—A suit, valued at Rs. 950, was brought in the Munsif's Court to recover possession of certain lands on the ground of illegal dispossession. No mesne profits up to date of suit were claimed, but the plaint prayed that such mesne profits from date of suit to recovery of possession, as might be ascertained in execution of decree, should be awarded to the plaintiff. The Munsif gave a decree in accordance with the prayer of the plaint. The plaintiff then asked that the mesne profits might be assessed, and in his petition he roughly estimated them at Rs. 1,595, and thereupon it was held both by the Munsif, and on appeal by the District Judge, that the Munsif had no jurisdiction, as he could not give a decree for more than Rs. 1,000. Held, on appeal to the High Court that the Munsif had jurisdiction to ascertain the mesne profits, and to give effect to the order made in his decree in the suit, notwithstanding that the amount of such mesne profits, when added to the value of the suit, might come to a sum in excess of the pecuniary jurisdiction of his Court. RAMESWAR MAHTON v. On 7th January 1872, whilst it was so under mortgage, the same mortgagor D executed bonds whereby he mortgaged K to the defendants, and in suits brought on the basis of those bonds, came to an amicable settlement with the defendants by which, on 25th February 1879, he settled K in putni with them; the bonus for the putni going to satisfy the mortgage debts. In 1885 a suit, to which the present defendants were not made parties, was brought by the mortgagees of the bond of 5th January 1879, and, in execution of the decree in that suit, K was put up for sale and purchased by the plaintiff on 21st June 1886. In a suit brought in 1890 against the defendants to set aside the putni and for khas possession of K, it was found that the plaintiff had notice of the putni. Held, that the defendants as putnidars had an interest in K within the meaning of s. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, and should therefore have been made parties to the suit in 1885, and thereby given an opportunity of redeeming the mortgage on which that suit was brought. If not as putnidars, they were entitled as second mortgagees to have an opportunity of redeeming the prior mortgage and to be parties to that suit. Partition.

- (1) Private partition—Putni of separate share—Subsequent partition under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, s. 128—Parties—Defendants.—The plaintiffs were co-sharers in a certain estate, T being another co-sharer. In 1818 a private partition took place between the co-sharers in the course of which certain specific lands were allotted to T in severalty, the rest remaining undivided. T granted a patni lease of her share to third parties, who were thenceforth in possession; and subsequently there was a partition of the whole estate by the Collector under Bengal Act VIII of 1876, in the course of which the specific lands allotted to T in the private partition were allotted to the plaintiffs, who brought against the tenants of the land suits for rent to which they made the patnidars defendants. Held, that the patnidars were properly made parties to the suits in order to try the question of the right to receive the rent as between the plaintiffs and the patnidars: Held also that, assuming that the patnidars were not parties to the partition proceedings by the Collector, they were entitled to retain possession of the lands allotted to their lessor T in the private partition, by which partition the plaintiffs were bound, notwithstanding the subsequent partition by the Collector. S. 128 of Bengal Act VIII of 1876 does apply to a case in which there has been a prior private partition, the estate in such a case not being "held in common tenancy" within the meaning of that section. HRIDOY NATH SHAHA v. MOHOBT-NESSA BIBEE, 20 C. 285 ...
- (2) Right to partition—Joint possession—Co-parceners—Suit by subordinate tenure-holder for partition against superior landlord.—Joint possession alone is not a sufficient ground for compelling a partition. In order that persons may be co-parceners, and so have a right to partition, not only must they be in joint possession, but that joint possession must be founded on the same title. A subordinate tenure-holder therefore has no right of partition as against his superior landlord. The plaintiffs were proprietors of a 12 anna share and dur talukdars of the other 4-anna share of taluk A, which consisted of a $7\frac{1}{2}$ annas share of so much of the lands of three villages, D, B, and T, as appertained to an estate in the Collectorate No. 23. Estate No. 23 with three other estates represented fractional shares in three parganas comprising about 500 villages. No partition had been made of these parganas, but by private arrangement certain lands in the village had been assigned to one estate and certain other lands to another, some lands being kept joint and common to all four estates. In estate No. 23 there was another permanent tenure S, a taluk consisting of lands not only in the three villages D, B, and T, but in nine others; of this taluk a 2-anna share belonged to L, one of the zamindars of estate No. 23, and a $7\frac{1}{2}$ anna share of the remaining 14-anna share was held under the plaintiff. In a suit against L for partition of such of the lands of taluk A as appertained to estate No. 23, and were separate from the other estates, to which the other zamindars of estate No. 23 were made parties, held, assuming the plaintiffs were entitled to partition at all, that the suit would lie as regards the lands specified as belonging to estate No. 23 without reference to the lands held in common as belonging to all the four estates. *MAKUNDA LAL PAL CHOWDHURY v. A power-of-attorney, executed by him as manager, appointing the accountant of the Bank to be its attorney in Lucknow did not contain express authority to the person so empowered to sue for debts due to the Bank. The accountant conducted, under this power, the chief business of the branch, and while he was so conducting it this suit was instituted against defendants, of whom some objected that he was not authorized to sign and verify the plaint. Held, that s. 51, Civ. Pro. Code, s. 537.—In a proceeding under s. 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, recorded on 27th April 1893, A and B were respectively made first and second parties, and were ordered to put in statements of their claims to the land in dispute, which they accordingly did. B died on 24th May 1893. In his statement filed on the 31st May, A. disclaimed any interest in the land, but stated that his mother, D. K. (who had been a party concerned in the dispute which led to the original proceeding), was the owner and in possession of it. On 1st June B. S. applied to be substituted as a party in place of his father B. D, K and B. S. were made parties without any fresh proceeding under s. 145 of the Code. The case was heard on 27th June and 7th July, and on 17th July the Magistrate found as regards the possession in favour of D. K. Held by PETHERAM, C.J. and TREVELYAN, J. J. (RAMPINI, J., dissenting) that since the possession to be enquired into was the possession at the time of the initiation of the proceedings, the words "parties concerned in the dispute" meant parties concerned at that time: there was no power in such a proceeding to introduce parties who were not concerned in the original dispute. No order could therefore be made against B. S., and the proceedings were bad as against him, Per RAMPINI, J.—The preliminary proceeding under s. 145 of the Code may, and in many cases must, partake of the character of a general citation to all; the parties concerned in the dispute to appear, and it is not necessary for the Magistrate to confine his final order as to possession to the parties whom he may have named in the preliminary proceeding. The Magistrate had power to substitute the name of B. S. for that of his father without commencing the proceedings de novo. The alteration in s. 145 of Act X of 1882, the present Crim. Pro. Code, of the language of s. 53 of the old

It was objected that this was not the proper mode of procedure, and that the defendant should take steps when inspection was refused. to sell, alleges that the latter is not a co-sharer, and says that he himself is entitled to the property. One of two co-sharers, entitled to equal shares in an inheritance having taken possession of the whole, was sued by the other for her share, with mesne profits from the date of the suit. To provide costs, the latter had sold to her co-plaintiffs the right to claim half of her share. The defences were—(1) relinquishment of her claim in favour of the defendant; (2) that the defendant had a right of pre-emption as to part, in consequence of the above transaction; (3) that the share in dispute was subject to a proportion of the debts due from the estate of the deceased, chargeable on the whole inheritance; and that if the plaintiffs should be held to be entitled to a decree, they should also be declared liable to pay, according to shares, their part of all the debts of the deceased liquidated by the defendant, as well as a proportion of money which he had expended, in good faith, in litigation for the protection of the inheritance. As to (1), the two Courts below concurred in the finding that no relinquishment had taken place. As to (2), it was pointed out that there had been no attempt to sell a share of the inheritance, but only to sell a share in a suit; and it was held, that the position taken up by the defendant was inconsistent with his claiming to pre-empt, so that pre-emption was inapplicable. As to (3), it was held, that, although the plaintiffs could not have a decree for mesne profits during the whole period of the defendant's possession, yet, if any account was to be taken of the defendant's payments, it must also be taken of his receipts and it was held that the incidental benefit to the plaintiffs, who had not authorized the litigation, in which expense had been incurred, did not give rise to any implied contract on their part, or render them liable in equity for any portion of that expense. *ABDUL WAHID KHAN v. The general rule, that the tie of kindred between a woman's natural family and herself ceases when she becomes degraded and an outcaste, applies with even greater force as between her and the members of her husband's family. Public Nuisance.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 268, 283, 290—Obstruction on tidal navigable river.—The mere fact of an encroachment on a tidal navigable river does not necessarily amount to a public nuisance so as to render a person causing such encroachment liable to punishment under s. 290 of the Penal Code, but there must be evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in s. 268. The rule laid down in that case to the effect that any encroachment, however slight, on a tidal navigable river constitutes an offence under s. 290 is too widely stated. Each case should be determined on its own merits, and a decision arrived at as to whether the encroachment has caused an obstruction or not. The petitioner was charged with having erected a jag in a tidal navigable river constructed of trees and dams and thereby having committed offences under ss. 283 and 290 of the Penal Code. There was evidence to show that the jag was about 45 cubits long and 20 cubits broad, and that it was erected on the silted side of the river where it was about 300 hats broad, and that it did not obstruct the ordinary navigation of the river. The lower Court held that the jag could not but cause an obstruction, and convicted the petitioner under s. 283. Held, that as there was no evidence to show that the petitioner had caused any danger, obstruction or injury to any person in any public way or line of navigation, the conviction under that section could not be sustained. Held further, that he could not be convicted under s. 290, as there was no evidence of any obstruction to the ordinary navigation of the river. *JUGAL DAS DALAL v. Crim. Pro. Code, 1882, ss. 106, 349—Procedure to be followed by Magistrate trying a case when he is not empowered to bind the accused down under s. 106 of the Crim. Pro. Code.—An Honorary Magistrate exercising third class powers tried an accused on a charge of criminal trespass and convicted and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 10, or in default to suffer seven days' rigorous imprisonment. He further submitted the case to the District Magistrate with a recommendation that the accused should be bound down to keep the peace under s. 106 of the Crim. Pro. Code, and the District Magistrate ordered the accused to furnish security. Held, that the order of the District Magistrate was illegal and must be set aside. Before an order under s. 106 can be properly passed the conviction must be by a Magistrate of the class mentioned in the section and not by a third class Magistrate, and the order must be passed by the Magistrate who convicts and passes the sentence. (2-a) Of or omission to sue for portion of claim—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 43—Cause of action.—In 1889 the plaintiff sued the defendant for possession of a piece of land which the defendant had included in her homestead by building walls. In that suit the plaintiff alleged that on that land there were two palm-trees which belonged to him, and that the defendant had wrongfully prevented the pasis from going to those trees to tap them, but he asked in his plaint in that suit for no relief in respect of the trees, only stating that he would bring a separate suit for them. The Munsif dismissed that suit on the ground that the land was within the defendant's tenure, and his decision was affirmed on appeal. In a suit brought in 1890 against the same defendant for declaration of title to and possession of the two palm-trees and for an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing his possession of them. Held, that the claim

(a) (c) and (d) of the section. Though cl. (b) does authorize the Court to determine the name and description of the tenant, this was not intended to and does not authorize the Court to decide conclusively disputes as to the right to possession of the land. - (2) Civ. Pro. Code Act (XIV of 1882), s. 13, Exp. 2 — Question substantially in issue in former suit.—A widow purported to charge land which she held for her widow's estate with payment of a debt; and afterwards surrendered her estate to the next heir, or reversioner, on condition that he should pay all her debts, and a suit was brought by the creditor after the death of the widow against the reversioner to recover the debt. This suit had been preceded by another one brought by the creditor against both the widow, then alive, and the reversioner, the cause of action against the latter being that in his hands was the property chargeable. That suit was dismissed as against him, but decreed against the widow. In the present suit payment was claimed from him of a balance of the deceased widow's debt, on the ground that he had agreed, on taking the surrender of the estate from her, to become responsible for her debts:—Held, that this "might and ought to have been made ground of attack" in the former suit, within the Exp. 2 of s. 13 of the Civ. Pro. Code; and must accordingly be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit; and therefore that this suit was barred. The Acts of 1877 and 1882 did not alter the previous state of the law. KAMESWAR PERSHAD v. RAJKUMARI RUTTAN KOER, 20 C. 79 (P.C.)=19 I.A. 234=6 Sar. P.C.J. 241 ...

The widow of the testator, who had unsuccessfully opposed the grant in the Court of the North-Western Provinces, then filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Parganas for, amongst other things, the construction of her late husband's will. Held on appeal in such suit, that the application for letters of administration was not a suit properly so called, and that the finding on the construction of the will by the Court of the North-Western Provinces, being incidental and for the purpose of determining the question of the representative title of the applicants could not be regarded as concluding the plaintiff by res judicata from obtaining a construction of the will in the suit brought by her. - (5) Rent suit—Decree as to amount of land—Rent payable for former years—Rate of rent payable.—The plaintiff sued the defendant for rent of certain lands. The defendant contended that he was not liable for the entire rent as part of the land was in the plaintiff's possession. The defendant failed to prove his contention, and a decree was given for the full amount claimed. Subsequently the plaintiff again sued the defendant in regard to the same property for arrears of rent for subsequent years at the rate claimed in the former suit. The defendant had the land measured, adduced evidence, and endeavoured to raise the same defence as he had in the previous suit. No allegation was made to the effect that the rent had been altered in consequence of anything that had happened since the previous decision. The lower Courts, without considering the evidence adduced by the defendant,

- held that the defendant could not again raise the same contention, as the question had already been considered and determined in the previous suit, and was res judicata between the parties. Held, that the previous decision did not operate as res judicata, and that the lower Courts ought to have determined on the evidence adduced what the amount of rent in question was. NIL MADHUB SARKAR v. BROJO NATH SINGHA, 21 C. 236 ... 789
- (6) Rent suit—Decree as to rent payable for former years—Evidence of rent payable.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants for rent of a certain jote, claiming a higher rent than the defendants admitted. The High Court in second appeal gave a decree at the lesser rate admitted by the defendants. Subsequently the plaintiffs again sued the defendants in regard to the same jote for arrears of rent for subsequent years at the rate claimed in the former suit. The defendants contended that the rate of the rent as regards this jote was, by virtue of the judgment of the High Court in the previous suit, res judicata as between themselves and the plaintiffs. Held, that where in a rent-suit a Judge tries the question and gives judgment on the question "what is the yearly rent," and makes that the foundation of his judgment, that decision is res judicata between the parties. The previous judgment of the High Court, therefore, operated as res judicata. Per NORRIS, J.—Even if the judgment of the High Court, did not operate as res judicata, still it was some evidence of the rate of the rent of the previous year. *BUKSHI v. - (7) Suit by reversioners—Former suit by widow—Suit for construction of will.—A suit by reversioners after the death of the widow of a testator for the construction of his will and codicil and for a declaration of the plaintiffs' rights was held under the circumstances of the case not to be barred, as being res judicata, by the dismissal of a former suit which had been brought by the widow claiming the estate on the ground that the will and codicil were forgeries, and in which they were found to be genuine. *CHUKKIN LAL ROY v. - (8) Suit for possession and mesne profits—Ex parte decree for possession without mention of mesne profits—Subsequent suit for same mesne profits and for subsequent mesne profits—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 13.—A suit was instituted for recovery of possession and for mesne profits. An ex parte decree for possession only was made, but the decree was silent as regarded the mesne profits. Subsequently a second suit was instituted for the same mesne profits as well as for mesne profits for a subsequent period. Held, that the claim for mesne profits prior to the institution of the first suit was barred under s. 13 of the Civ. Pro. Code. JIBAN DAS OSWAL v. DURGA PERSHAD ADHIKARI, 21 C. 252 ... 800

(1) *Civ. Pro. Code, Act XIV of 1882, ss. 30, 539—Religious endowments—Removal of sajjadanashin—Contentious and non-contentious cases—Act XX of 1863.—S. 539 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies both to contentious and non-contentious cases. The interest required to enable a person to sue under that section must be an existing one, and not a mere contingency: the mere possibility of an interest or the mere possibility of succession to the managership of the properties concerning which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue. The right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment is an independent right wholly irrespective of the right of the other worshippers, and, therefore, non-compliance by a worshipper with the provisions of s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not affect a suit for the removal of a trustee of a Mahomedan endowment. (2) *Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), ss. 30—539—Suit to remove a Mohunt—Trust for "Public Religious purposes"—Numerous parties.—The "numerous parties" mentioned in s. 30 of the Code of Civil Procedure mean parties capable of being ascertained. Two plaintiffs instituted a suit, on behalf of themselves and 42 other persons named in a schedule to the plaint, against a mohunt of an akhra to have certain alienations of property belonging to the idol set aside and the mohunt removed on the ground that he was wasting the idol's property and setting up an adverse title to it, and to have another mohunt and trustee of the property appointed in his place. The plaintiffs alleged that they and the 42 others named in the schedule were in the habit of worshipping the idol or of contributing to the worship and expenses of it, but it was clearly established by the evidence that any Hindu who chose was at liberty to give puja or render service and worship, and that others than the plaintiffs and the 42 persons named in fact did so, and that the plaintiffs and the persons named were, therefore, not the only persons interested in the suit. The plaintiffs applied for and obtained leave to institute the suit under the provisions of s. 30 of the Code. A decree having been made in their favour, on appeal, Held that the suit was not one to which the provisions of s. 30 were applicable, as the persons interested therein, not being the whole Hindu community, were incapable of ascertainment, and that the suit was one to which the provisions of s. 539 of the Code applied, the suit being one based on the existence of a trust for public religious purposes and upon a breach of that trust and for the appointment of a new trustee, and being such should have been dismissed, not having been brought in the District Court or with leave of the Collector. She had, in former years, adopted a son to her deceased husband. The defendant objected throughout that this son (deceased in 1884) having been of full age in 1881, when this suit was brought, the widow was not entitled to sue at that time, he having that right. Held, that the Courts below had rightly disallowed the objection. There was no sufficient evidence to show that the adopted son had attained majority when this suit was brought, and the plaintiff could sue either in her character as widow of the deceased or as guardian of the minor adopted son. To bring into operation the special limitation enacted in s. 31 of Bengal Act VIII of 1869, where deposit had been made under s. 46, the deposit could only have been effectively made of rent that had accrued due before the date of such deposit. *SURJA KANT ACHARJYA v. - (5) For arrears of rent—See ACT VIII OF 1885 (TENANCY, BENGAL), 21 C. 554.
- (6) For arrears of rent—Bengal Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 11—"Defaulting Proprietor"—"Defaulter"—Incumbrances created by previous putnidar—Mokurari lease, Avoidance of—Voidable incumbrances.—In 1839 a mokurari lease was granted to the predecessors of the defendants by the then putnidar of a putni created in 1819. In 1848 the putni was sold for arrears of rent under the provisions of Bengal Reg. VIII of 1819, but the purchaser at that sale did not interfere with the mokurari. In 1885 the putni was again brought to sale under the same Regulation for arrears of rent, the default being made by one of the successors of the purchaser in 1848, and at this sale it was purchased by the plaintiffs. In 1890 the plaintiffs sued to set aside the mokurari lease, contending that they were, by virtue of their purchase, entitled to avoid all incumbrances created by any putnidar and were not restricted to avoiding merely those created by the immediate defaulter. The defendants contended that the provisions of s. 11 of the Regulation restricted the plaintiffs to avoiding incumbrances, the acts of the immediate defaulter, and that, as the purchaser in 1848, and his successors in title previous to the defaulter in 1885, had not interfered with the mokurari lease, the plaintiffs could not have it set aside. Held (RAMPINI, J., dissenting) that the plaintiffs were entitled to avoid the mokurari. Held, per GHOSE AND BEVERLY, JJ., that having regard to the policy and principle of the regulation a zemindar is entitled to bring a putni to sale in the same condition, in which it was at the time of its creation, and that the purchaser is therefore entitled to avoid all incumbrances imposed upon it since its creation, whether by the actual defaulter or by any of his predecessors. Per GHOSE, J.—The mokurari lease was an incumbrance upon the putni, but inasmuch as s. 11 distinguishes in cls. 1 and 2 between incumbrances and leases it might be regarded as the latter. If treated as an incumbrance it must be held to have accrued upon the putni by reason of the defaulting zemindar not having set it aside, though entitled to do so within the meaning of these words in cl. 1. If treated as a lease the words in cl. 2, holder of the former tenure, are wide enough to include any putnidar whether the defaulting or a previous holder. Per BEVERLEY, J.—The words "defaulting proprietor" used in cl. 1 of s. 11 must be read as the "proprietor of the tenure in default," and were not intended to be restricted to the particular proprietor for whose default the tenure is brought to sale, and the

| (7) For arrears of rent—Liability of auction-purchaser for arrears of rent prior to purchase—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 65 and 169, cl. c.—Rent, Suit for. —The plaintiffs sued the first five defendants for arrears of rent due in respect of a certain tenure, and obtained a decree on the 16th of April 1888. In execution of that decree the tenure was sold on the 8th April 1891, the defendants 6, 7 and 8 being the auction-purchasers. On the 18th of April 1891 the plaintiffs sued all eight defendants for the arrears of rent which had become due between the 16th April 1888 and the 8th April 1891. Held that the auction-purchasers (defendants 6, 7, and 8) were not liable, the arrears of rent sued for having become due prior to their purchase. FAEZ RAHAMAN v. RAMSUKH BAJPAI , 21 C. 169 | 746 |
| (8) For arrears of rent—Priority of auction-purchasers—Sale set aside by an ex parte decree and afterwards confirmed—Notice. —The plaintiff and the defendant purchased the same tenure at successive sale, held in execution of two decrees under the provisions of s. 59 of Act VIII of 1869, for arrears of rent due in respect of different periods. Defendant's sale was first in point of time, but was set aside on the judgment-debtor obtaining an ex parte decree against the defendant. The suit was, however, restored and ultimately dismissed, and the defendant's purchase remained undisturbed. In the meantime, however, after the ex parte decree, but before the dismissal of that suit, the tenure had been again sold for further arrears of rent which had accrued before the defendant's purchase and was bought by the plaintiff. Held that the defendant's title must prevail, being prior in point of time, and that the defendant was under no obligation to discharge the arrears of rent for which the second decree was obtained or to give notice of his purchase to the plaintiff. RAM CHUNDER SADHU KHAN v. SAMIR GAZI , 20 C. 25 | 17 |
| (9) For arrears of rent—Putni sale—Mortgage security, conversion of—Surplus sale-proceeds, charge of mortgagee upon—Charge—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 73. —A putni taluk having been sold for arrears of rent under Reg. VIII of 1819, the surplus sale-proceeds held in deposit in the Collectorate were drawn out at intervals by the holders of money decrees, against the putnidars. The plaintiff, who held a mortgage of the taluk, sued to recover from these decree-holders the amount of his unsatisfied claim. Two of the defendants pleaded that, over and above the amount taken by them, there remained in deposit sufficient money to satisfy the plaintiff, and that the other unsecured creditors who had drawn out this balance should alone be held liable. Held , that the surplus sale-proceeds were to be regarded as the shape into which the plaintiff's security was converted, and as before such conversion the security could not be split up into parts, the plaintiff was entitled to realize the balance due to him out of the whole of the surplus, as otherwise his security would be diminished. GOSTO BEHARY PYNE v. VIII of 1819, ss. 5, 7—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 13. —A putni taluk was sold in execution of a decree, but the auction-purchaser, although he obtained possession, did not get himself registered in the zemindar's scrishṭa . In a suit by the zemindar against the former holder of the putni for rent due for a period previous to the sale, held , that the suit lay against him, and that the rights of the zemindar were not affected by the existence of the remedy provided by s. 7 of Bengal Reg. VIII of 1819. SURENDRONATH PAL CHOWDHRY v. TINCOWRI DAS , 20 C. 247 | 167 |
| (11) For arrears of rent—Reg. VIII of 1819, s. 14—Putni sale—Seputni interest—Notice of sale—Onus of proof as to requirements of Reg. VIII of 1819. —Certain putnidars having defaulted, their putni right was put up for sale by the zemindar, under Reg. VIII of 1819, and purchased by the defendants. The plaintiffs being seputnidars of a portion of the lands let out in putni were, after the sale, dispossessed by the defendants. The seputnidars brought a suit against the defendants asking for possession of the mauzahs forming their seputni, alleging that the notification of sale had not been duly served, and that the proceedings taken by the zemindar | | which he found, for reasons stated in his judgment, to be false. Held, taking the order to have been one made under s. 195 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, that it was a proper sanction, inasmuch as it was given to a contemplated prosecution by a definite person. Semble, on the supposition that the order was one under s. 476 of the Crim. Pro. Code, that it was not necessary for the validity of an order under that section that there should be any evidence on the record contradicting the case which was thought to be false, or that there should be a preliminary inquiry. Although it may sometimes well be that a preliminary inquiry ought to be held, the adoption of a rigid rule to that effect is neither rendered imperative by the law, nor is it desirable. *BAPERAM SURMA v. (2) Civ. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 380—Suit for amount of legacy under will—Suit in nature of administration suit—Discretion of Court under s. 380—Interpretation of Acts—"May"—"Shall."—The power given to the Court under s. 380 of the Civil Procedure Code to order security for costs is discretionary, and one which the Court ought, or ought not, to exercise according to the circumstances of each case; and unless it is shown that the exercise of the power is necessary for the reasonable protection of the defendant, the Court ought not to interfere. Where the plaintiff in a suit against the executors of a will for the amount of a legacy had, on account of the conduct of the defendants, no alternative but to seek the assistance of the Court, and the defendants stated that the assets were not sufficient to pay all the legacies in full, and it was therefore clear that the suit would have to proceed as an administration suit in which the plaintiff could in no event be liable for the defendant's costs: Held, that the Court would not order the plaintiff, although she was not in possession of any immoveable property within British India, to give security for the costs of the suit. A plaintiff who is entitled under a will to a beneficial interest in a part of the surplus income derived from immoveable property does not become thereby "possessed of immoveable property" within the meaning of s. 380. *In the goods of PREMCHAND MOONSHEE. - (1) Power of, in revision—Further enquiry—Power of Sessions Judge to direct—Crim. Pro. Code (Act X of 1882), ss. 423, 435, 436 and 439.—A complaint was made before a Magistrate, which involved a charge of dacoity against the accused person and others. The Magistrate in dealing with the case, proceeded under s. 209 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and finding no case of dacoity prima facie established, proceeded to frame charges under s. 254 of the Code, charging the accused with offences under ss. 380 and 448 of the Penal Code, viz., theft in a building and criminal trespass. Having heard the whole of the evidence, he then acquitted the accused under s. 258 of the Code and gave him sanction under s. 195 to prosecute the complainant under s. 211 of the Penal Code. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge to revoke that sanction. The Sessions Judge proceeded to consider the whole case, and finding that a proper inquiry had not been made and all evidence available not taken, and that had this been otherwise, a Sessions case might have been established, directed the Magistrate to hold a further inquiry, and to proceed, in accordance with the result of such inquiry, either to commit the accused to the Sessions or grant the sanction, as the case might be. Held, that the Sessions Judge had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law. Acting as a Revision Court, he could send for the record for any purpose mentioned in s. 436, but he was not competent under s. 436 to direct a fresh inquiry, inasmuch as the accused had not been improperly discharged of an offence triable exclusively by a Court of Sessions, but had been acquitted of an offence within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The Sessions Judge had, in fact, exercised, the jurisdiction vested in him as an appellate Court under s. 423, as if an appeal had been presented to him from an order of an acquittal; such powers in revision cases are only conferred on the High Court. *BAIJANATH PANDEY v. An equitable right of set-off exists in this country when both the claim of the plaintiff and that of the defendant arise out of the same transaction, although the claim sought to be set-off is not within the provisions of s. 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Quere—Whether a decree could be passed in favour of the defendant for any balance which might be found due to him. *BROJENDRA NATH DAS v. which an occurrence, the subject-matter of a judicial investigation before him, has taken place, he should be careful to confine himself to such a view of the place as to enable him to understand the evidence placed before him, and should take care that no information reaches him with reference to the occurrence which he has to investigate beyond what he acquires by that view, and if the place of the occurrence be in dispute he would be wise in postponing his visit till all the evidence has been recorded, if under such circumstances he feels disposed to visit it at all. But where a local inquiry by a Magistrate takes the form of an investigation into the occurrence on the site of the occurrence instead of in his own Court, and he takes evidence on the spot, such evidence should not be recorded unless it is protected by all the safeguards by which evidence, on which a Judge may act, is protected by law. HARI KISHORE MITRA v. Code, in cases coming under the Transfer of Property Act. S. 86 of the Transfer of Property Act binds the Court to give a decree at the rate of interest provided by the mortgage if it be a rate to which no valid legal objection can be taken; that interest must be so computed down to the day fixed by the Court, according to the terms of the 2nd paragraph of the section, that is, the day being one within six months from declaring in Court the amount due. The amount to be declared due is the amount due for principal and interest on the mortgage, including interest at the rate provided by the mortgage-deed up to the day so fixed; it is the same whether it be ascertained on an account being taken by the order of the Court, or be ascertained by the Court itself. Where a mortgage-deed stipulated for payment of half-yearly instalments of interest, and in case of default in such payments, provided for compound interest: Held that such a provision was not in the nature of a penalty; and there being no question of fraud or oppression, improper dealing, exorbitant amount, dealing with an ignorant person or any such consideration, the stipulation as to interest must be enforced. SURYA NARAIN SINGH v. Per PETHERAM, C.J., NORRIS and GHOSE, JJ.—Where an actionable claim has been assigned, the debtor may be discharged from all liability by payment to the buyer of the price and incidental expenses of the sale with interest on the price from the date that the buyer paid it: provided that such payment is made at any time before a judgment of a competent Court has been delivered affirming the claim, or before the claim has been made clear by evidence and is ready for judgment; but if such payment is not made before the period mentioned the assignee is entitled to judgment for the whole debt. Per PRINSEP, J.—The provisions of s. 135, cl. (d), refer to a state of things existing at the time of the assignment, and not at the time of the enforcement of the payment of the debt. Per O’KINEALY, J.—Clause (d) of s. 135 refers to circumstances arising before the transfer of the actionable claim, cls. Variance between Pleading and Proof.

Alleged inconsistency in pleadings—Construction of solehnama—Estoppel. —After the death of a Hindu widow, a suit was brought to have a sale of a portion of her husband’s estate made by her set aside on the ground that the sale was invalid except in so far as it affected the rights of the widow herself therein. The plaintiff, who was a collateral relation, alleged himself to be the heir and sued as such, but was not so in fact. It appeared, however, that a solehnama had been entered into between him and the heir by virtue of which he had acquired all the rights of the heir in the property in suit. It did not appear that any objection had been taken in the lower Courts to the framing of the suit on the ground that the plaintiff was not the heir, and the defendant was allowed to raise the same objection to the suit as he might have taken had it been brought by the heir. On appeal it was contended on behalf of the defendant that the plaintiff, having sued as heir, could not be allowed to succeed on the basis of the solehnama, as this would be contrary to the rule laid down in 11 M.I.A. 7. Held, that if this objection had been taken in the first Court, the plaint and issues might and ought to have been amended, but as it was not so taken, and the substance of the case in the plaint was that the sale by the widow was invalid beyond her own interest, under the circumstances of the case there was no weight in the contention of the appellant. *NURAL HOSSEIN v. Money paid for benefit of another—Payment of revenue by the claimant of an estate while temporarily holding it under a decree in his favour, afterwards reversed—Liability of owner for money so paid for his benefit.—Where a claimant having obtained possession of an estate under a decree in good faith, has paid the revenue and cesses (in default of which payment the estate would have been sold), although the decree may have been reversed afterwards, and he may have been deprived of possession, he nevertheless is entitled to be repaid the amount by his opponent, who benefits by it, provided that he has not realized, or failed, through any fault of his own, to obtain enough out of the rents and profits during his possession to cover this expenditure. The plaintiff had paid revenue and cesses in such a case. Held, that on his accounting for mesne profits and all that he had received, or might have received from the estate, he should recover from the defendants, in whose favour the decree was ultimately made, the difference between his, the plaintiff's payments, and receipts. *DAKHINA MOHAN ROY v. - (1) Construction of will—Joint tenancy in fee—Life-estate—Intention of testator—Restricted enjoyment, Direction as to.—A testator devised his estate, should his wife remain his widow, for the general benefit of his wife and her child then living, and any other children to be born to him of his said wife before or after his death. He also provided that, should his wife remain his widow, she should have a full life-interest in the estate, and should not be annoyed with any vexation about shares during her lifetime, but that after her death her children and their descendants should take per stirpes; and in the event of his wife not remaining his widow and her child or children being living, then the estate should go for the general benefit of his children in equal shares when of the age allowed by law. And in the event of his said wife contracting a second marriage, and his children dying before marriage and without children and under age, his wife should take half of his estate and the testator's brother the other half, and in the event of the brother dying without children, the testator's wife should take the whole estate. The testator's wife remained his widow until her death, her children having all predeceased her without being married. Held, that the intention of the testator by the first devise was to give an absolute estate to his wife and children jointly, and that the remaining clauses of the will were merely intended to restrict the mode in which they were to enjoy the gift. *HALIBURTON v. - (2) Duress—Forfeiture—Condition of residence—A testator, by his will, directed that if any of the female members of his family, either from misunderstanding or from any other cause, should live in any other than a holy place for more than three months, except for the cause of pilgrimage, they should forfeit their rights under the will. The plaintiff, a widowed daughter-in-law of the testator, and a minor, was removed from his house by her maternal relations and brother with the aid of the police, and resided for more than three months with her mother: Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiff's absence did not work a forfeiture. *TIN COURI DASSEE v. - (3) Execution of will—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), s. 50—Evidence as to the execution of a will by a person near death.—On a question of fact, raised in 1887, whether an alleged testator had or had not been able to duly execute his will, as he was said to have done during his last illness, the judgment of the District Court in the affirmative was restored. The judgment of the High Court, which would have revoked the probate granted in 1882, was reversed, upon the consideration of conflicting evidence as to the mental capacity of the testator, and as to the genuineness of his signature. ROMESH CHUNDER MUKERJI v. RAJANI KANT MUKERJI, 21 C. 1=17 Ind. Jur. 428=6 Sar. P. G. J. 340

- ... 633
- (4) Execution of will—Proof of due execution of will where the mental capacity of testator is in dispute—Rules for decision of such cases—Presumption—Duty of appellate Court in deciding on evidence of witnesses.—In all cases in which the evidence is conflicting, it is the duty of a Court of appeal to have great regard to the opinion formed by the Judge in whose presence the witnesses gave their evidence, as to the degree of credit to be given to it; and probably the advantage of hearing the witnesses give their evidence is of special value where there is conflict between them as to the mental capacity of a person whose conduct they have observed, and whose state of mind they depose to: for the original Court has not merely the better opportunity of judging of the truthfulness of the evidence from the manner in which it is given; but also of judging how far the witnesses possess those qualities on which depends much of the value of evidence given in good faith; viz., power of observation, power of judgment, accuracy of expression, and general intelligence which are of special importance in cases where the execution of a will is disputed on the ground that at the time the will was alleged to have been made, the mental capacity of the testator was such that it was doubtful whether the will could have been "duly executed." "Due execution" of a will implies not only that the testator was in such a state of mind as to be able to authorize, and to know he was authorizing, the execution of a document as his will, but also that he knew and approved of the contents of the instrument; and in such cases of disputed execution the Judge should consider and express an opinion upon both these questions. In ordinary cases execution of a will by a competent testator raises the presumption (sufficient, if nothing appears to the contrary, to establish) that he knew and approved of the contents of the will. Also under ordinary circumstances the competency of a testator will be presumed if nothing appears to rebut the ordinary presumption: ordinarily, therefore, proof of execution of the will is enough. But where the mental capacity of the testator is challenged by evidence, which shows that it is, to say the least, very doubtful whether his state of mind was such that he could have "duly executed" the will as he is alleged to have done, the Court ought to find whether upon the evidence the testator was of sound disposing mind and did know and approve of the contents of the will. Where this had not been done, the appellate Court, after considering the whole evidence, held, contrary to the decision of the lower Court, that the will was not

(1) Adjournment for attendance of witnesses—Civ. Pro. Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 156—Discretion, exercise of—Witnesses, attendance of—Power of High Court on second appeal.—On that day fixed for the hearing of a suit, the defendant applied for process against certain of his witnesses who had been summoned but who had failed to attend, asking for an adjournment to obtain their attendance. This application was refused and the case was proceeded with. The plaintiff's evidence was recorded and that of one of the defendants; the defendants being unable to produce further evidence, the Court recorded that the case was closed and that judgment would be delivered on the following day, the 31st December. On the day following the defendants produced certain witnesses and asked that they might be examined. This application was rejected, and judgment was subsequently delivered in favour of the plaintiffs. Held per PETHERAM J.—That the omission to examine the defendants' witnesses on the 31st December was a substantial error in procedure, and that the Munsif had therefore exercised his discretion wrongfully. Per GHOSE, J.—That although there was some doubt whether the Court on second appeal could interfere in a point of discretion, yet this doubt was not strong enough to justify an expression of opinion contrary to that arrived at by the Chief Justice. MONI LAL BANDOPADHYA v. Code (1861), s. 194; (X of 1872), s. 191; (X of 1882), ss. 207, 208, 210, 256, 257, 288—Crim. Pro. Code, 1882, s. 364—Recording statement of accused by Magistrate.—An accused person has the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution after their examination at the judicial inquiry before the Magistrate previous to commitment. The fact that the Crim. Pro. Code of 1872 contained an express provision to that effect, which was omitted in the Code of 1882, together with the provision of ss. 210 and 256 of the latter Code, must not be taken to show an intention on the part of the Legislature to deprive an accused of that right. The express provision in the Code of 1872 was probably thought by the Legislature when framing the Code of 1882, as being redundant, seeing that the Evidence Act of 1872, which was passed at the same time as the Crim. Pro. Code of 1872, made sufficient provision on the subject. S. 256, moreover, does not prohibit cross-examination before a charge is framed; it permits a further cross-examination expressly directed to the case found and embodied in the charge, and would enable an accused person, if he has reserved his cross-examination, to exercise his right at that time subject to a discretion given to the Magistrate by s. 257. Where depositions of witnesses for the prosecution before the Magistrate previous to commitment were taken without any cross-examination by the accused being allowed, it was held that such depositions were improperly treated as evidence in the Sessions Court, as they had not been "duly taken" in the presence of the accused within the meaning of s. 288 of the Code. *QUEEN EMPRESS v. adjournment for ten days, the witnesses for the defence were examined and cross-examined, and on the day on which the judgment was to be delivered, an application under s. 257 of the Code of Criminal Procedure was made on behalf of the accused, asking that process should issue for the witnesses for the prosecution to be recalled and further cross-examined. Held, that if the Magistrate was of opinion that the application was made with the intention and for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice, he was right in refusing the application. It lies upon the party who thinks himself aggrieved to show that the ends of justice have been in some way frustrated in consequence of the refusal to recall the witnesses. It is necessary to be very careful that persons on their trial should not be prejudiced; but it is also necessary, on the other hand, to see that proceedings in the Criminal Courts are not hampered in a needlessly carping and litigious spirit, losing sight of the main purpose of those proceedings, and giving over-attention to matter of mere form. *NILKANTA SINGH v. Expl. III of s. 13 of the Civ. Pro.
